THE FIRE BRINGERS.

Centuries ago. in the absence matches, it was customary to borrow fire from a neighbor when one's own hearth became cold. Thus Chaucer, the early English poet, had Pandarus reproach Troilus for abbreviating his visit to Sarpendon, saying in his quaint Anglo-Bezon:

We come hider To feehen fyr and rennen hom ayeyn" In parly Colonial days, a somewhat similar custom appears to have prevalled in New England. The Massachusetts Charitable Fire Bocisty, established in 1792, had for its object "to relieve sufferers by fire and to lavent means by which fires may be prevented." Amongst other practical things, "Directions for Preventing Calamities" were promulgated.- Some of these directions are interesting oddities and some have a present value. The following are samples: "Oblige all servants to go to bed before you do, and inspect all fire-
