BENSITIVENESS

Some people without a sensitive nature never become semitive through experience. And sensitiveness is such David Livingstone returned to Boota doubtful blessing that few born without it would take any great pains to acquire the quality. The most common conception of a sensitive person is of one whose feelings are easily hurt. In wounded feelings, unquestionably, sensitiveness gives its earliest manifestation; sensitive children are at times the unhapplest. But at other times they are the happlest. Unworthy impulses led many to attend to the new teaching. Nevertheless, the multitudes must have been drawn to the Saviour by a nure if unnamed affection. The winsomeness of His manner, the earnestness of His words, above all, the inexpressible love in His heart, must have found answering affection in the hearts of eager men and women. Jesus wins people to-day by the sheer attraction of His personality, by the persuasion race, feel His power and come to Him, and all are welcomed by Him. Jesus gave Himself to His service.
