TELL THE WORLD

John Wanamaker said, "To discontinue advertising is like taking down your sign. If you want to do business, you must let people know it. I would as soon think of doing business without clerks as without advertising." And Wanamaker knew what he was talking about. The enormous business he has built up is ample evidence of the correctness of his

- principles. It is just as important for you to advertise as it is for him. Size has nothing to do with it. The mere fact that you may. be a neighborhood retailer of no great size does not signify you have not something in the way of service or convenience or price that your neighborhood should be told about. In fact, such a location makes advertising of some sort all the more essential.

No big business was ever built by "hiding its light under a bushel." Your competition is keen. You may not have a newspaper in which to tell your story. Then you will have to devise some other means to keep your story going the rounds. No set rule or method can be set down---you've got to work it out to meet your own particular competition. Letters, circulars, telephone calls, personal visits, movie slides, sample distribution, store newspapers are but a few of the mediums possible. You may be able to think up something much better.

And don't think you have nothing interesting to talk about. Look around and you will find any number of things you do that your competitor does not.
