

THE TEST OF A MAN

The test of a man in the light of his... The man who stands on his feet and...

It isn't victory, after all, but the fight that a brother makes... The man, who, driven against the wall...

It's the bumps you get, and the jolts you get... And the shock that your courage...

The hunter of sorrow and vain regard... The prize that heaped your hands...

It isn't the show you deal, but the blows you take on the good old earth... That show if your stuff is real.

WRONGLY SUSPECTED A bright young girl from the timber...

"I had never been to school," she said... "I had never expected to go, though I often wished I could learn."

"One day Mr. Ray, the owner of our pines... He was a very kind and tender-hearted man."

"I determined to send me and all our family away, but his mother, to whom he was very kind and tender-hearted man."

"I kept my place, but I could not be light-headed again while the cloud hung over me. I never felt certain whether my mistake had been his or mine."

"It was in one of those unhappy days that Max Weber, the overseer of 'boas' of the logging camp, came to headquarters for orders."

"He inquired after her father, and she always did, but the absent look on his usually beaming face showed that he had something on his mind."

"No, but I'm very certain that I know who took it," he said, as soon as he found words, "the very last man I should have guessed."

"My father, at the entreaty of the plant overseer, was promoted to his place, and he insisted on banishing himself to the northern forests."

"I need a man to go—and to do so alone," he told him. "It will give you a chance to prove what you're made of."

"When the strain was over I gave up entirely and lay unconscious with my brain fever for seven weeks."
