INDIAN SUMMER

When summer's verdant beauty flos, and autumn glows with richer dyes, nofter charm beyond them lies-It is the Indian summer. Ero winter's snows and winter breeze Herenve of beauty all the trees, The bulpy spring renewal sees In the sweet Indian summer.

And thus, dear love, if early years Have drowned the germ of joy in tears A later gleam of hope appears --Just like the Indian summer. And ere the snows of age descend, () trust me, leur one, changoless friend; Our falling years may brightly and- demand, though unusual, was not un-Jost like the Indian summer. -Samuel Lover.

TRAINED FOR THE PART

It often happens that tricks of the simplest kind arouse the wonder and curiosity of a public gathering more than the most wonderful and delicate mechanical effects. An American play-writer, tells of introducing a cat on the stage, and of the way she was trained to play her part. -The whole scene, says the manager, excited interest, but the cat created more talk and wonder than any other actors because everyone is familar with the habits of cats, and we know how difficult it is to teach one to perform even the simplest trick.

Every night, at a certain point, this cat came on the stage, walked neross to the fire place, stretched horself, and then lay down in front of the blasing hearth, for we burned "real fire" in a gas log to make the scene more real-

The cat did her part so easily and naturally that she frequency got a round of applause, and it always happened that before we, had played three nights in a town the most popular topic of conversation was: "How did they ever train that cat to come out on the stage, stretch herself, and lie down in front of the Are?" simple matter. A few minutes before it was time for her to go on we used it was time for her to go on we used it out her in a basket just large anough to hold her comfortably, without giving her a chance to change her out giving her a chance to change her position, and then leave her in a odor him to consider his place in the cellar.
