The Lesson Explained thou not common." 5-14. The 10th chapter of Acts should be carefully studied in connection with this lesson. In that chapter we have the historic record concerning what occurred in the household of Cornelius and a more detailed account of what occurred to Peter than what is given, here. In the present lesson we have Peter's explanation of what occurred to the apostles and brethren in Judea. Many of the Jewish Christians contended with Peter upon his return because he had gone in to the uncircumcised Who show these different traits and Gentiles (Cornellus and his household) and eaten with them (verses 1-13), and the present lesson contains Peter's explanation of his conduct, in which he relates for himself -what occurred. In the account in Acts 10 we see how, the natural and the supernatural play into one another in Bible history. Peter was hungry (chapter 10: 10) and there was nothing more natural than that the hungry man would dream of enting, but God gave a supernatural turn to a dream that had a natural origin. Splendid indication for a big hay He had been "praying" and the supernatural vision was in answer to his him to tell him to send for Peter and for (chapter 10: 1-6). While God pre-
