LITTLE MILLIONAIRES

Twenty little millionaires Playing in the sun: Millionaires ir mother-love, Millionaires in fun. Millionaires in leisure hours Millionaires in joys, Millionaires in hopes and plans,

Are these girls and boys. Millionaires in health are they, And in dancing blood, Millionaires in shells and stones, Sticks and moss and mud; Millionaires in castles In the air, and worth Quite a million times as much

As castles on the earth. Twenty little millionaires, Playing in the sun; Oh, how happy they must be, Every single one Hardly any years have they, Hardly any cares; But in every lovely thing ... Multimillionaires. -Ethelwyn Wetherald

1. "Neither can they prove the things whereof they now accuse me." 10-13. Here we have an illustration of the courtesy and tact of the Apostic Paul. Paul was in best sense a gentleman and a diplomat. He would, by all proper means, win the favor of those whom he would gain for Christ. Many fearless and valiant heralds of the whole truth of God and stalwart defenders of "the faith for all delivered to the saints," injure the cause of the very faith which they are eager to get men to accept by the harsh, overbearing, discourteous, irritating, antagonizing way in which they defend it Would that all advocates of a "Pauline theology" would learn from Paul Pauline practice, especially in the matter of courtesy, kindness and tact. In point of fact Felix was a very bad man in his personal conduct and an unjust man in his official position, yet Paul found something to praise even in him., Paul never shrank from declaring the whole truth of God (ch. 20: 27), he told Felix himself before he town, is preparing to open new coal got through with him the whole truth with the most fearless and unflinching plainness (verse 25), but one can be frank and faithful without being at all brusque and boorish. But the combination of utter fidelity and delicate courtesy which we find in Paul is exof Acton and will be welcomed back by Agrippa (26: 2), and over and over letters with considerable compliments, but there are very plain and unsparing words before he closes. This Spiritgiven tact and winsomeness of address the Spirit-given boldness of utterance. Paul says, "Make my defense," but great truth of the resurrection (verses in part:

Advertisers

The FREE PRESS is anxious.

to serve you and serve you well. We can give your advertisement better attention and therefore make it more attractive if the copy is supplied to us on Monday or Tuesday.

If copy fails to reach us until Wednesday forencon there is a rush to set it up before the forms close, and the result is likely to be less satisfactory.
