Through a forgotten town, there everything is tinted gray, And drab, and brown. . . .

The brook that dances merrily, With laughter in its voice-May have small reason to be gay, To carol, and rojoice. . It may see much of misery. And want, and fear and care; Its voice may be the one glad note Upon the air.

God grant that I may watch the brook, And take its dream for mine, . Until my life may be as brave And wonderful and fine As the slight silver stream that flings Its song on high!

God grant to me a heart that sings Until I die. . . . -Murgaret E. Sangster.
