SETTING THE TABLE

Setting the table is like visiting strange lands. I lay the cloth: damask from Donecan see the pale imprint of shamrock and fern In its frosted surface: Silver and steel from Birmingham

And from the flery fields of Shel Salt from the sea coast, tasting of se winds and sea foam; Pepper from Zanzibar, black with the tropic sun; Sugar from Cuba and the clattering canes of the Caribby

Bread from Saskatchewan and still gold prairie seas: Olives from Italy and the ancien groves of the Orient; Maybe figs from Smyrna, date from Algiers Nuts from Brazil, oranges from Edam

As we wipe off the travel stains In little brass bowls from Bagdad It seems that all the ends of the earth Have met at my table. -Lloyd Roberts

THE ORGAN-GRINDER'S SERENADE

On sunny summer days the balconies at the front of a certain children's hospital are crowded with children, victims of accidents or disease. Some of them hop out on the crutches they are just lecarning to use; others are carried out, carefully bundled up, and a nurse sets them in a warm and sheltered place and watches anxiously to make sure that no dangerous druft shall come their way. There is not much to be seen from the balcomies, for they face a vacant lot, and the hospital is placed, as it should be, on a wide and quiet avenue, printer in Philadelphia, when he had To be sure, electric cars whis by, and taken off his working apron at night, sometimes a pleasure carriage takes used to sit poring over his dozen of that route to the surburban parks, old volumes by firelight.
