Nomination Day in the Evening

The wisdom of holding the nominations for mun icipal offices in the evening, instead of at noon, which was formerly the custom, was clearly shown on Monday evening. The weather was the most miserable to be out in of any evening this year, and yet in spite of this handicap, there was an attendance of more ratepayers than have attended nomination meeting in some years. The evening meeting offers an opportunity for every citizen to take part in these proceedings in which they are vitally interested. It gave all an opportunity to place in the field candidates whom they desired to see have public office wbestowed on. This was shown in the large number of candidates whose names were put in for nomination. In only one department was there not more than sufficient candidates nominated for the posi- Aldermen and Commissioners, and it should put tions. It also shows that, given an opportunity, these qualities above any consideration of political citizens are interested in their town and town's af. stripe " fairs. The meeting was lengthy but interest was sustained all through. The only disadvantage that to seek election or not. Men who have never aspired is truly worth a pound of cure, and their action to name called out as nominated and in the next few meet with favor from citizens generally minutes are called upon for a speech and to doclare their intentions, are rather suddenly taken by surprise. At the meeting on Monday evening, however, Confederation Year by publishing an extremely atratepayers did not expect this from candidates. #### The Minister's Hard Job

"The man does not live who can please all the public. By the same token the man in the ministry of the church does not live who can please all members of his congregation .. Though he he a Solomon and a Moses combined he finds out sooner or later that he has a job cut out for him which may well give him pause. If he is what is known as a "mixer" and pays special attention to the social contact with members of his flock he is more than likely to incur the criticism that he is too light. If, on the other hand, he is an able pulpiteer and preaches good sermons but is not a mixer, he is criticised relatives at Toronto since Saturday, by those who will say he is too high brow. In every way his task is a hard one. In every way he carns what he gets many Hmes over. - Kingsville Reporter.

Shop Early

On another page of this issue will be found an advertisement from the merchants of Acton, asking that you do your Christmas shopping early. They point out that you can be better served and secure better selection if you adopt this early shopping plan. It's a co-operative movement to help everyone. The merchants like time as a rule to help you with your purchases. They like to show you their stock ber and help with your selections. They can do this best if you spread your shopping out over the month. There are always items that are forgotten until the last minute that will make shopping busy enough in the last few days. The business places of Acton have anticipated your Christmas needs. They have purchased goods many months ago to fulfil your requirements. They are now on display. The Christmas season is here. Let us enter into the the annual Women's Institute Convenspirit now and spread the cheer all through the tion at Toronto last week. Leslie and little daughter, of George-

Straight Ahead 35 Miles

Stand at a cross road some week-end, see the families speeding by---away to the big city. Then learn a lesson. If you have vision, or in you flows the least drop of the blood of the prophets, you will know that you are witnessing part of one small scene in a great tragedy, namely--the passing of the small town in Canada. You may personalize the action, if you wish. The crossroads at which you stand is Acton, fifty years hence. Deserted. Every house, every store, every mark of the town as it stands to-day---gone! Town property again farm land. Streets plowed Your investment here gone----all gone!

Don't say this is a pessimistic or cynical thought. It will happen, right here in Acton, and will happen in other small towns unless the citizens of this community and all such communities, learn the true meaning of loyal hometown support. Every thinking person knows our town survives, prospers and grows in proportion to the support its business institutions receive. Buying in the big city is suicide for your home town. You undermine your own investment here. Local stores have just as good merchandise---prices are just as low---and they are here every day to make good on every sale or transaction. At least give Acton merchants the first chance to serve you. They are always glad to show you goods and quote prices.

Now we leave you to your own imagination. When you pass the next crossroad, en route to the city on a shopping tour, think of that crossroad as your town at no distant date---so wiped out, partly through your present disloyalty...
