

THE LIGHTS OF HOME

The white lights, the bright lights, How fair they shine to-night I love the glint and gleam of them, The changing tapers gleam of them, Against the lowering night.

Those far lights, the star lights Affine along the bay— No prince of India's envied gems For decks of Lomhard diadems

Oh, dear lights, oh, dear lights! The last long league is passed; The winds of mist from shoreward creep; The anchor now is cast

"In the days of my youth," Father William replied, "I remembered that youth could not last. I thought of the future whatever I did, That I never might grieve for the past."

"You are old, Father William," the young man cried, "And life must be haunting away; you are cheerful, and love to converse upon death."

"I am cheerful, young man," Father William replied, "Let the cause thy attention engage; In the days of my youth I remembered my God."

And he hath not forgotten my age. If were well if young men generally would take to heart Father William's sane answers to the interrogations of his youthful friend.

Efficiency in Home Management

Women to-day as well as men, are just beginning to realize the service that electricity has to offer. We who once thought of electricity as an expensive luxury, are beginning to see how electricity is not only economical but its labor-saving devices have lightened the work of every creature in Christendom.

Without a doubt the home that you now occupy is not as replete with these modern comforts as it might be. Picture to yourself the modern kitchen. It has a good ceiling light with a handy switch. It has side lights and several convenient outlets for your electrical appliances.

Now, contrast it with the usual kitchen, perhaps your own. It has only a centre light—generally one you have to reach up to turn on. When would you rather live and work in?

Those who live in Acton have little excuse for using obsolete home wiring. We know a company that can give service in the way of wiring and installation that is not even surpassed by electrical engineers in the largest metropolitan cities.

KING EDWARD'S THOUGHTFULNESS

The fact of King Edward VII endeavoring him to the hearts of the people outside of England as well as to his own subjects. One of the attendants at a foreign court describes a visit of the British monarch and the impression he made.

The teller of the story is an old lady who has lived at the court since her youth. The king came. He smiled, he beamed, he was like the sun. He made us all feel that we were beautiful and wonderful, and yet there was no flattery.

He not only said nice things, but he did nice things. He thought of everybody, and we never felt that his charming speeches and attentions came from the idea, "it is the tactful thing to do."

One evening there was a great function at the palace. We had been standing for nearly two hours. Our own queen is most kind and considerate in these matters, but the visit of the English king was such honor, such a success that it made her quite forgetful.

I am getting old, and King Edward saw my distress. He was walking about, talking to everybody. Suddenly he stopped in front of me. I made my courtesy, and heard my poor stiff knees crack.

"Duchess, you must sit down! I see you are worn out by standing so long. Sit down in front of me for a few moments. I will stand in front of you so no one shall see."

The dear, kind man was as good as his word. By and by he went up to our Queen. What he said I don't know, but she sat down, and gave the signal with her hand, which means that we should sit down.

The furnace is a taskmaster. You must rush to it the first thing in the morning to shake it and stroke it during those last tired moments at night before you can go to bed.

But to grant the desirability of oil heating is one thing. The choice of an oil heater for your home is an entirely different matter. Oil burner discussions with interested and well-meaning friends can hardly provide you with facts and figures to help you decide it definitely.
