This and That
Halloween—next Wednesday.
November comes again next Thursday.
Halloween parties are being arranged now.
United Church anniversary services next Sunday.
Read in your news items, but don't forget to sign them.
And is Indian Summer to follow these splendid autumn days?
There hasn't been much cause to complain about the weather here lately.
Sunday gave a decidedly agreeable example of delightful Canadian autumn weather.
The ice lovers are getting their practice trials these days with clearing away of the tracks.

THE ORIGIN OF THE DOLLAR-MARK
The earliest known occurrence of the "L" in print is in a Chaucerian manuscript published in 1797 at Lausbourg, France. That fact was pointed out in 1899, says Prof. Florian Cajari, Mr. Lee did not invent the sign himself, but was the first to use it as a mark of ownership. He took a great deal of research on the steps in its evolution over the centuries, and in the process, he discovered that the "L" was first used in the Spanish arithmetic of the late fifteenth and early sixteenth centuries, and was then introduced into the English language by the first printed book on arithmetic, "The Art and Mystery of the Art of Arithmetick," published in London in 1592. The "L" was used in the same way as the "L" is used today, as a mark of ownership, and was first used in the Spanish arithmetic of the late fifteenth and early sixteenth centuries, and was then introduced into the English language by the first printed book on arithmetic, "The Art and Mystery of the Art of Arithmetick," published in London in 1592.

A Successful Fishing Party
Messrs. Chester Matthews, E. J. Harrison, R. R. Arnold and Dr. E. J. Nelson formed a fishing party this week that did not fail in their quest. The party was very successful in their catch and enjoyed splendid fish dinners. Up to the present we have been unable to ascertain which one of the quartet was the champion fisherman of the party, but possibly that secret they brought home will divulge that fact some time.

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE
These Organisations Have Much in Common Whether in England or in Canada
Referring to the first meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of Acton, Middlesex, England, the Acton Express and Gazette said last week:
The committee of the Acton Chamber of Commerce found plenty to talk about on resuming work after the holiday. The Chamber of Commerce and President, the Chamber's proper attitude toward the public and the desirability of bringing its rules up to date, questions which were being considered before the vacation.
The Chamber is one of the "live" institutions we have, judging from its constant efforts to "ginger up" the town, for whose existence it is chiefly responsible by having been the pioneer advocate of incorporation. Some of its younger members, however, would like to see the Chamber "ginger" itself up by doing something more than the general, industrial, and commercial interests of its members. What scope there may be in that direction remains to be seen. Last year the Chamber kept well abreast of current questions, local and general, including the new principles of rating and valuation, railway, post office and telephone facilities, and traffic problems. This year it has a factory magnitude as president, and has possibly original suggestions to make towards the original scope for the Chamber's energy in promoting the prosperity of the town's rapidly growing productive interests.
