The state of the s lar case for this community. Over and over again in the past sixty years have homes been similarly bereft of wife and mother when she was just past her prime in life. Was God unjust and crubl in such cases? Would it not have been more just and reasonable for those who thus complained to have made a little unselfish inward reflection as to who had really been unjust in the case. I have always been thankful that early in life my Mary and I came to learn the comfort and benefit of carrying life's basket together, and sharing each other's hard times. When I found it desirable to reduce my hard work with some laborsaving device, I am glad to say I was always able to find some improvement by which Mary was relieved of some of the drudgery of her share of the work. As a result of this thoughtfulness we have been spared to one another in our declining years, and now that we are living on borrowed time, life still has a large amount of joy and satisfaction
