

A HAPPY MOMENT

When grandma says to me, "Stand up against the wall, I want to see you grow up."

Chronicles of Ginger Farm

Written Specially for The Free Press by JUDY O'GRADY

As I sit down each week to write my chronicles of events I find almost unconsciously, I take my pen to the "What have you done this week?"

This last week for instance as far as actual work goes, I cannot say I have done anything startling, but yet it has been a very satisfactory week.

Last Sunday, when we took the kiddies to church after Sunday School, Paul seemed possessed with a striking fit of intense discomfort.

Since I started to write I have had a very pleasing interruption. Nothing less than to connect the pipe to the soft water system.

At last we had the water flowing and I was able to get on with my work.

At last we had the water flowing and I was able to get on with my work.

IN THE SAW GLASS

PAUL E. THOM

Mr. Rutledge climbed into the car and began to look at the engine. He had a feeling that something was wrong.

John Warner, with the faded blue of his shirt rolled up above his massive, unshorn forehead, stood by the open door of a flock of crows.

"Three, five or seven," he repeated to himself. "I wonder if the crows can count? They are smart enough for most anything."

From beside the track left by the saw glass, a heavy, four-foot stack, had evidently long lain exposed to sun and wind.

John put every ounce of his great strength into the effort to get the saw glass out of the hole.
