GETTING OUT A PAPER

It is a common fault of men to think that if they tackled the job the other fellow is doing they could make a much better success of it than the one who makes that particular job his life business. Haven't you often heard some one may, "Now, if I were doing it, etc." Yes, but if you actually were, would the result be any better? There's the point. Speaking of a business with which we are convergant, we have seen an article which recently appeared in the Linetype News, reproduced by paper after paper. which makes the statement that on many occusions they have heard the orderes expressed that if they were given the opportunity they could put out a paper that would be an improvement on any paper put out in their town. Could they
