A little woman in the home for incurables in an eastern city has lost one of her legs at the knee and is a constant sufferer, but there are some joys that are still open to her. An eminent psychologist tells of a childhood acquaintance who used to warn him against forming the habit of "cawing."

The worst part about giving up in a specified case is the increased possibility that you will do so again. No habit is more quickly formed than that of being beaten.

Do not say "I can't," because that prepares the way for failure. No matter how smart, or how strong, or how competent you are, if you say "I can't," often enough, your brain and your muscles will feel the paralyzing effect of your self-distrust and refuse to serve you when facts seem against you, so often you succeed that it would almost seem faith creates the ability it assumes.

The oftener you say "I can," the more you will accomplish.

A clergyman gave a young woman of his acquaintance a very bad quarter of an hour. On her wedding day he sent her a telegram, which, as received, ran: "John IV, 18."

On looking up the text the girl was horrified to read: "For thou hast had five husbands; and he whom thou now hast, is not thy husband."

After they had restored the young woman to consciousness, inquiry was made at the telegraph office, when it was found that the operator had omitted the letter or numeral, indicating the first epistle, I John IV, 18 reads: "There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear."
