SIGNIFICANCE OF CHINESE PROPER NAMES

Chinese names of places often define their character. Thus, the terminal "yang" means fortress; Liaoyang is the "iron fortress"; Ping-yang "the fortress of peace." "Cheng" means a walled city, as Feng-wang-cheng, the "Phoenix Walled City." ..... Shan" is a mountain, "hal" the sea, "kwan" a camp-thus Shanhat-kwan is the "mountain-sea-camp." A "ling" is a mountain pass; Motionling, near Mukden, is the "heaven-scraping-paus." The suffixes "tao" or "to" indicate islands; "po" or "pluo," a harbor; "wan," a bay; "klang" and "ho," a river; "kow," u port; "fu," a first-class city; "ju," a provincial capital. "Pel" is north; "nan" is south, "king" is capital. Can you tell what these names mean, "San-shan-toa, Chemulpo, Tallen-wan, Yangtie-klang, Hoangho, Yinkow, Chifu, Anju, Poking and Nanking?
