LITTLE SHADOWS

- I have a little shadow That follows me around. At home, no matter where I go This shadow will be found.
- I may be sitting reading, Then I'll rise from off the chair, And walk into some other room, When, really, I declare, As sure as I turn quickly
- That little shadow's there. I'm in my den, hard working On stories that I write, Quite certain I am all alone The door closed good and tight, When comes the queerest feeling Of someone somewhere near-That tickliest kind of shiver When a fairy bites your ear-
- And if my little shadow doesn't Then and there appear! I walk into the pantry. .. I saunter up the stairs, I never really am just me, I seem to go in pairs: stroll around the garden Where pretty poppies blow, And sense that little shadow.
- Just behind, a step or so, And so it is till sleepy time, When even shadows go, And then I get so lonesome-Like a jug with nothing in-For I miss my little shadow With its little shadow-grin. I tip-toe up the stairway; To my shadow's room I creep. And I tip-toe over softly.

Just to steal a tiny peep;

And I watch my dear wee shadow

- as she lies there, fast asleep. And ever Sunday morning comes, As sure as half-past-seven, My bedroom door slides open; In glides a gleam of heaven, A teeny night-gowned figure, With a golden, curly head, And a smile of summer-gladness, As a little voice has said, "Please may I come beside you, dad; And cuddle in your bed?"
- I clasp my little shadow; Her arms twine round my neck. And what care we for warring. . . · Financial woes and wreck, For I love my little shadow, And my shadow she loves me; And I want her always near me, As my shadow ought to be. I thank the God of shadowland For shadows such as she.
- And with these thoughts of shadow And of little shadow's dad. A happiness comes stealing And it makes her daddy glad, For no matter what may happen, All his plans for her endure, In his sound and sane provision In his wisdom to insure, And his darling little shadow,
