Some of you may have wondered why in Paul's famous trinity of Christian graces, hope should be classed with faith and charity. You know that without faith it is impossible to please God. You know that charity is the fulfilling of the law. Hope, however, seems a more personal matter. Why should it be found in such glorious company? Faith fulfills your duty to God, charity your duty to one another, but hope concerns your duty to yourself. Nothing can down you while you have hope. The most appalling misfortunes are powerless against you if you look over them to the better time coming. If you are without hope, you are beaten even if you have encountered no special hardship. Sometimes you hear young people asking, "What's the use?" Nothing especial has gone wrong with them, but they have no

Paul made no mistake when he put hope in between falth and charity. The Christian who loses his hope, will not keep his faith long, and his charity will cease to give service, so, it, too, will die.
