EGYPT BUYS CANADIAN APPLES

Canadian apples are now finding favor in Egypt, land of the ancient pyramids. Until recently Egypt was not seriously considered by Canadian apple growers as a potential market for their most delectable of fruits, but when the quality of the Canadian apple became known, it was not long until Egypt became the fourth largest consumer of that popular Canadian fruit. The value of exports of Canadian apples to Egypt in 1933 touched the high level of $135,177. During 1933 a trial shipment of Ontario apples, consisting of Ganos, Baldwin, and Ben Davis was made in hampers. This shipment was well received and it is felt that the Ganos in particular will become popular in Egypt as red apples are in demand.

Although Canada produces a wide range of fruits from hardy northern berries to peaches and grapes, the Canadian apples is particularly important, not only on the score of quality, but for the fine quality produced. Apples have been grown in Canada since the days of early settlement as far back as 1635. The principal apple-growing areas of Canada are the Annapolis Valley in Nova Scotia, the Saint John Valley in New Brunswick, large districts in Southern Quebec and Ontario, and the warm interior valleys of British Columbia. Estimated production of apples in Canada during the present year is placed at 3,384,610 barrels.

Canada's exports of apples during the calendar year 1933, amounted to 2,905,415 barrels valued at $11,043,439. The principal consumer of Canadian apples was the United Kingdom which absorbed 2,840,110 barrels, valued at $10,061,420.

ABOUT 488 SPECIES OF BIRDS IN CANADA

It is probably not generally known, and the statement may cause some surprise, that there are some 488 distinct species of birds in Canada. By "species" is meant "kinds of birds" that average as distinct from each other as dogs from cats, or horses from donkeys. If really fine points are considered all the bird forms that the expert ornithologist recognizes, viewing species as do "cattle raisers when they discriminate between breeds of cattle, then the species would be increased to about 690 sub-species, or even more, depending on how finely it is desired to distinguish. All these birds cannot be seen at any one time or in any one place in Canada or, in fact, anywhere else. Each species has its own season and limits of distribution. Some are sea birds, rarely seen far from the coast, while others are dwellers of the deep forest, while other frequent open-primaries, marsh or meadow according to their natural requirements. Some are eastern, others western, some northern, others southern. Many are just birds of passage through much of Canada, nesting in the high north, wintering in the near or far south from just below the international boundary to the humid tropics or even to Antarctica itself.

A certain proportion of these birds are just stray wanderers far from home, — storm-blown walls, victims of wanderlust or pioneers seeking out new territory to inhabit. But with all these complications and restrictions of distribution almost any given locality in Canada can boast of more kinds of birds than most people realize. Ontario is not a particularly birdy locality, although—the country over, it occupies a fairly average or representative position in this respect, yet the latest list of Ottawa birds now contains 246 different species that have been actually observed in the Canadian Capital and the adjoining countryside at one time or another. Leaving out the occasional stragglers that are likely to be seen only by lucky accident, once or twice in a life time, there are about 200 birds that any keen and active observer can reasonably expect to meet in and around Ottawa sooner or later, and one hundred is not too many to hope to see in one day at certain favorable migrational seasons of the year.

MUCH RELIEVED

The skill of Fritz Kreisler in wielding the violinist's bow is one of wide-spread knowledge, but it remained for Alfred E. Edstrom, of Chicago, to reveal Kreisler's subtle use of a bit of barbed sarcasm when occasion requires.

Mr. Kreisler, according to a story which Mr. Edstrom says the violinist tells on himself, had been engaged to play a musicale given by a prominent society matron. The conversation, as related by Mr. Kreisler, was as follows:

"And the charge, Mr. Kreisler?"

"Two thousand dollars," was the reply. "And you understand, of course, you are not to mingle with the guests?" the matron stipulated.

"In that case, madam, my fee will be $1,000," Mr. Kreisler responded.

NO FREE LESSONS

"How is it," asked a police magistrate of a culprit haled before him for robbery, "that you managed to take this man's watch from his vest pocket when it was secured by a patent safety catch?"

"My fee, your honor," replied the man politely and with dignity, "is $10 for the full course of six lessons."

TOP-LIKE

Service Manager: You say your car runs like a top.

Motorist: Exactly—it runs a little while and then stops.

Mrs. Hilton: "William, what are these Russian steppes that I read about in the newspapers?"

Mr. Hilton: "One of the new-fangled dances, I suppose!"

Mrs. Knagg (with magazine): "It says here that a South Sea Island wife isn't supposed to talk until her husband speaks first."

Knagg: "I'll bet some of those husbands are fools enough to do it."

CANADIAN SALT INDUSTRY

Canada's output of salt in 1933 was the third largest in the history of Canadian salt mining, being surpassed only in 1928 and 1929. The total production of salt, including commercial salt and the salt content of brine used for chemical purposes, during the calendar year 1933 amounted to 280,115 tons. Production in 1928 totalled 299,445 tons, and in 1929 the output was 330,264 tons. Exports in 1933, totalled 135,620 tons, a large tonnage of salt entering Canada free of duty for use in the fisheries. Due to the location of the producing districts, the Pacific Coast fisheries are dependent to a large extent upon imported salt. Exports of salt were comparatively small amounting to only 5,335 tons.

The salt industry of Canada is one of the oldest non-metallic industries of the country, dating back to the early years of the last century when the Hudson's Bay Company obtained their local supplies from the brine springs of the McKenzie Basin. The discovery of salt in Ontario in 1856, was, however, the real beginning of the industry on a substantial basis, and production from the Ontario field has been continuous since that time. The opening of the Malagash deposits in Nova Scotia in 1918 inaugurated the first rock salt mine in the country. While salt deposits occur in nearly every province of the Dominion, during 1933 large-scale production was confined to Ontario, Nova Scotia, Manitoba and Saskatchewan. Deposits of commercial value have been located in Alberta and New Brunswick, which no doubt will be exploited when conditions warrant. There is no commercial production in British Columbia, although a few tons of salt were made experimentally in 1913. In the Northwest Territories a small quantity is produced for local use.

The Canadian salt production, except for small exports, is sold in Canada, principally to the dairy, meat-curing, canning, fishery, and chemical industries and as table salt for household use.

HARDLY A TESTIMONIAL

"Here is a testimonial it would hardly do to publish," said the quack. "A man writes: 'I have just taken the first bottle of your medicine...'"

"Well?" said his partner.

"There it breaks off short and is signed in another handwriting, 'Per executor!'"
