LOCALS

Municipal nominations—a week from to-morrow night.

Just thirty-one shopping days until Christmas. Do it early.

In a tax sale at Georgetown, no bids were received for the five properties offered.

The Royal Winter Fair is proving quite an attraction this week for many from this district.

Eight of the fourteen properties offered in a tax sale in Brampton were disposed of in the first offering.

The Acton Citizens' Band supplied the music for the Remembrance Day service in Georgetown on Sunday.

"Books That Matter" is a new feature in The Free Press columns each week. It will be found on Page Six.

Police Court in Acton this afternoon had five cases on the docket. One for assault and four for infractions of highway traffic laws.

The Free Press offering of Personal Christmas Greeting Cards is now ready. The offering is limited. We advise placing orders early.

The Free Press Puzzle Poems create quite an interest each week. Mr. Cole certainly keeps them right up to the minute in thought.

Mr. J. M. McDonald and Mr. E. J. Haasard have both returned from their hunting trips and both have brought back their quota of deer.

The grave robbers are apparently due for operations in Halton County next. The ninth line cemetery was being watched closely during the week.

New subscribers to The Free Press can receive all the remaining issues of 1937 and all of 1938 for the regular subscription price of $2.00. This will include the special Christmas number.

A subscriber of The Free Press in Vancouver, writes: "We have been receiving our paper regularly and although many years have passed and with time some of the old has passed, we would miss the home paper, because of its high standing." Being human, an editor does appreciate letters like this that give an incentive to keep a high standing.

SULPHANILAMIDE — THE RED DYE MEDICINE

This remarkable drug has got away to a good start so far as free newspaper advertisement is concerned. Undoubtedly it is a valuable means of treatment, but it cannot safely be used under all conditions.

The greatest danger in the use of "Red Dye" is in its combinations with other drugs such as Epsom salts and some of the coal tar derivatives. So far, soda bicarbonate appears to be a safe vehicle for the drug.

The tragic loss of nearly 50 lives in the United States from one of these combinations indicates what care should be taken in the use of new-fangled remedies, some of which are being exploited by commercial houses. The one in question which does not appear to have reached Canada, is known as the elixir of sulphamamide. It appears, according to the Journal of the American Medical Association, to be a solution of 40 grains of sulphamamide to a fluid ounce of a menstruum containing about 72% of diethylene glycol, the latter being a substance akin to one in common use as an anti-freeze mixture for motors. It is believed that the tragedies referred to were due, not to the sulphamamide itself, but to the contained diethylene glycol or the combination of the two.

The unfavorable symptoms following the use of the combination are nausea, vomiting, malaise and sometimes diarrhoea. These are followed by complete suspension of the urinary function. In some of the victims examined after death there was degeneration of the kidneys and necrosis of the liver. The public should be warned not to use, and physicians would do well to refrain from the prescribing of semi-secret proprietary drugs. The best physicians are, it is said, distinguished by the small number of drugs they are accustomed to use.—John W. B. McCullough, M.D., D.P.H.

650 Foot Radio Tower Up Full Height

Hornby Site Visited by Hundreds Every Week — Higher Than Bank of Commerce

The new radio broadcasting station at Hornby, about 15 miles south-east of Acton, is nearing completion and each week attracts hundreds of visitors to view the gigantic structure. It towers 650 feet above the farm lands on which it is constructed and it is expected to be ready to send out programs from there next month.

Dwarfing even itself, by reason of its cloud-combing height, the mast appears almost delicate in construction when seen from a distance, yet it tops the 35-floor Bank of Commerce head office building by nearly 200 feet and the burden resting on the 10-inch steel ball at its pivot base is in excess of 54 tons.

In the shadow of the lofty structure, and looking peculiarly squat by comparison, is the modernistic little building housing $250,000 worth of electrical equipment and which constitutes the nerve-centre of the O.B.C.'s new station, CBL. Designed to broadcast on a frequency output of 840 kilocycles, it will dominate the local field by reason of its station CBL, just completed at Vercheres, Quebec, the eastern section of a tri-station chain spanning Canada.

Gleaming white amid an autumn setting, the modernistic building housing the equipment is in sharp comparison with the surrounding farm lands. In it are the very latest gadgets dear to the hearts of radio engineers. There are two $3,000 100-kilowatt output tubes, cooled by distilled water and said to be the largest in use for North American broadcasting purposes.

Heat from the cooling system will be removed by air-blast and used to help heat the building, thus saving an estimated 1,000 gallons of fuel oil annually. Requirements also call for a 40,000-watt transmitter with provision for a short-wave transmitter and there are transformers, fuses, switching equipment, workshops, cleaning and ventilating systems and a thousand and one minor items, all arranged in logical and compact order.

The building also houses administration offices, a staff room, kitchen, toilet and a garage for two cars. Largest of the rooms is the transmitter control room where an inlaid linoleum floor forms a colored map of Canada, with names of cities having radio stations clearly marked. All controls for the station's circuits are operated by remote control from a console located within clear view of the bank of switch equipment and where the operator may have every necessary function at his finger-tips.

To assure continuous service to the Canadian radio public, the station is fed from two separate power lines and so arranged that either one or the other may be used at will. As an added safety feature, all vulnerable components of the transmitting equipment are provided in duplicate.

The 650-foot tower, which will be topped by air navigation beacons, is in itself an antenna. Below its bulk and buried more than 19 miles of it—radiating from base like spokes of a wheel. There are 120 main spokes, each 600 feet long, with smaller ones spaced between. Every square inch of metal in the building, radio and electrical apparatus, water pipes, conduits and metal window frames, is electrically connected with the ground system to avoid any possible loss of energy from the antenna.

The tower was completed a week ago and there remains but the painting and installation of the beacon lights to finish that end of the job. The building, however, is less advanced and considerable electrical work in connection with installation of the mass of equipment remains to be done.

Among the special features of The Free Press each week is a fashion picture and article by "Lisbeth." It is on Page Six, with other features of particular interest to women.

FINE GLEE CLUB COMING

Acton seldom gets an opportunity to hear a really good glee club singing in person. But this will come on the evening of November 29th, when E. R. Bowles, the popular organist of Toronto, is bringing his noted Toronto Male Chorus for a concert, given under choir auspices in the United Church. The chorus has a wide repertoire of numbers, ranging from grave and dignified to gay and rollicking, and under Mr. Bowles' baton has reached a position well up in the range of the best male choruses. In addition Mr. Bowles will play several organ numbers, both classic and popular, his program being quite different from the one he gave at a similar concert last spring.

EK-NAZI TELLS ALL

Hitler's first envoy to Italy and former head of the National Socialist Press Bureau in Washington, D.C., who has revealed he attempted to spread Nazism in Canada and the United States before becoming a disillusioned exile from Germany. Ludecke's efforts in Canada on behalf of Hitler were revealed in a book he published under the title "I Knew Hitler." Ludecke worked mainly through Montreal among other cities, and attempted to interest influential persons in Nazism. He was later thrown into prison for his opposition to Joseph Goebbels, Reich propaganda minister, escaping to the U.S. in 1934.

Why did the gravel walk? Because it saw the tap running.

The LETTER BOX "NASSAGAWEYA"

Dear FREE PRESS: A gentleman, who, in the home here, was looking through The Free Press, saw the news heading, "Nassagaweya," and asked for a proper pronunciation. I gave it out in the enlarged setting, but remarked that, frequently, or usually, the rear "a" was omitted. When the writer was very small, in a load of people bumping over a rough corduroy road, on a wet day, an old lady in the back seat of the "democrat" remarked, "They talk about the roads back in 'Nassagawey', if they are worse than this they are pretty bad"—the writer's first knowledge of the township.

However, to my questioner, I related an incident on the name. In the fall of 1890, while still a resident of the Leslie community, a tea-meeting was held in the then Methodist Church in Rockwood, which had been newly brick clad, and re-opening services were held the preceding day. At the tea-meeting, the leading speaker was Rev. Dr. Boyle, a retired Irish minister, who had been for years an intimate friend of the pastor, Rev. Jas. Walker. During his address, referring to a previous speaker, a minister who was from Nassagaweya, he said that many years ago a couple came to him to Hamilton station from Nassagaweya, who said they were from Nassagaweya, asked him if, instead of the usual fee, he would accept a barrel of apples. This was readily consented to, and a long while afterward, recognizing the gentleman on the street, Dr. Boyle reminded him that he had never received that barrel of apples. "Oh," he replied, "she wasn't worth it."

Dr. Boyle had a manner peculiarly his own. He was the preacher, morning and evening, the previous day. In reading the chapter in the morning, he came to of himself more highly than he ought to think. "Pausing," he remarked, "if I were asked the greatest weakness in woman's character, I do not know that I could tell you. But if asked regarding a man, I would say this: 'Thinking of himself more highly than he ought to think.'"

It may be remarked that the preacher at the afternoon service was Rev. Dr. G. A. Gifford, of Acton, who was conveyed thither by Mr. L. O. Matthews.

Of all those mentioned, all have passed away, and this writer seems to be left alone to tell.

In fact, it is more than likely that since the 1925 Union, the little church down by the creek may have been closed in favor of the larger former Presbyterian Church.

KIPLING'S "WEE WILLIE WINKIE" COMING HERE

Kipling's colorful characters live glamorously, adventurously and courageously on adventure's last frontier in the Twentieth Century-Fox picturization of his famed "Wee Willie Winkie," which will be the feature on Friday at the Gregory Theatre, with Shirley Temple and Victor McLaglen in the starring roles. From the heart of mighty India, where all the world is wild and strange, where the British raj ends at Khyber Pass, in the land of the Bengal Lancers, comes this glorious adventure of the Scottish Highlanders in action and of the little girl who won the right to wear their plaid.
