PREMAGE

Dear FREE PRESS book presented to me years before by a friend, which consisted of a series of essays by Bir .W. Robertson Nicell, editor of the British Weekly, on a great variety of topics of personal and social interest. specially referred to one on handwriting, an exercise I admitted needed improvement, especially in providing copy for printers. There is one chapter headed "Samuel which Sir Robertson explains has no reference to the Biblical worthy, but is in regard to a beloved cat he has had as companion for ten years. He enlarges upon the varying types he has known or read of, but in particular dilates upon his own. It is said to be half-Persian. very handsome, very affectionate and companionable, a great lover of Nirvana. As to his literary tastes, "while he may hearing some trash shout England uniting with America, he deliberately left the room." Of course he presents many useful influences to his readers, such as the value of contentment, "purrfug" in the home, in the way of kindly expressions, and so on.

It so happens that the youthful son of the Mause here, some months ago. breame possessor of one of these animals. reputedly of the same national extraction as Sir Robertson's pet. To say that he is an object of great interest is to but it mildly. Happily for us, but no doubt disappointing to him, we have been unable thus far to provide the usual fourfooted objects of amusement and prev-But a marble or small ball on the floor. or a spool auspended by a long cord, will afford him great exercise and de-

Every member of the household, and frequently visitors, takes great entertainment from "Beruffy," for so he is named from a peculiar ruff at bla neck. Even his reverence himself will sometimes hav saide cares of study and parish, and take a turn with "Beruffy," and bla leaning

He sometimes ventures abroad, and as the home of the Belence Master at the itigh School, our nearest neighbor, is separated from us by a very open wire fence, he frequently visits there, and if " he finds the door open, will walk in and enscouse himself in any available comfortable place. He is warmly welcomed and kindly treated, and played with. In fact, on the opening day of High School, when his youthful owner presented him self for his first enrolment, the Maste remarked on inscribing the name, "You are the boy who plays with my cat' lacking the normal furry prey, his chief outside interest has been catching some of the few of those pests of the prairies further east grasshoppers which have flown or hopped here, and his skill in dealing with one, he may bring into the kitchen, is remarkable.

Looking back through the years, there s only one other of the feline race which stands out in distinct prominence. In the Writer's childhood home there was a special grey cat which was much esteemed, and which, by the way, lived to a very great age, becoming known as "the old cat." I may say that I have read of its being used. But in the year in which Canada commenced its existenie as Dominion, we removed from the ancestral ploneer home, to an adjoining farm, in early April. In the finish-up sleigh load, containing such items as the sawhorse and various other odds and ends, the question of the custody of pussy became acute. Safely held in the arms of the writer, the care of her was decided by brother, two years younger. The matter was not settled until pussy positively winked one eye, which was interpreted as "Let him have charge." The transfer was made, resulting in the glow of satisfaction which follows a self-denying act. Would that At a meeting of enthusiastic hockey the act had been habitual through all the years. However, the act here recorded was a thousand-fold repaid by the party concerned.

Now of what use is all this dissentation? But, if a British peer can unbend and give a chapter on- his companionable cat, in the midst of twenty-six other articles, on varying themes affectne life's experiences, may not a humble old nobody find similar interest. All nature is full of variety. The Psalmist, in calling for ascriptions of praise to the Divine calls upon mountains and deeps: various atmospheric forces, birds and beasts: and even dragons. So may we for Milton this season, we have been include in our interests Rockies and foothills, oil wells, and forms of government with the antics of a playful Persian ! cat. PREE PRESS readers find varied interest in the picturesque description of farm and home life at Ginger Farm: the Clock Tower reminiscences, the Puzzle Poems; the outspoken editorials. and there have been from varied sources. information of turning to look for what
