Most of the maple syrup and maple sugar produced in Canada comes from the Province of Quebec, which accounts for about 75 per cent, of the marketed output. Ontario accounts for about 20 way, pried open a window and crawled per cent., and New Brunswick and Nova in. Scotts produce the remainder. One of the largest manufacturers of maple products is a farmers' co-operative organization of about 3,000 members, which operates a large modern plant at Pleasisville, Quebec. The largest augar bush in Ganada is reported to be in Ontario, twelve miles north of North Bay, where a dairy company has a square mile of bush leased from the Ontario Government. The leased area contains more than 30,000 maple trees, of which about 10,000 will be tapped this year. Maple sprup and maple sugar are pure and natural products. The syrup is made by boiling the sap in evaporators to a temperature of 21914 degrees Fahrenheit, and sugar to 340 degrees. It takes about 40 gallons of sap to make a gallon of maple syrup and there are about ten pounds of maple sugar in a gallon of maple syrup. The quality of Canadian maple products is unexcelled, as the Canadian Government insists that maple sugar and maple syrup placed on the market must be 100 per cent. pure.
