DRASTIC REFORMS AIMED TO STOP ELECTION CORRUPTION

Electoral reform measures designed to give the body politic in the Dominion of Canada a thorough house-cleaning, to wipe out corrupt practices, and to crack down on the political racketeer, were brought before Parliament on Tuesday by Hon. C. G. Power, Minister of Pensions and National Health

Back-door subscriptions, secret funds, underground contributions, and all the other abuses inherent in the electoral system, are to be eliminated under penalty of fines ranging from $200 to $5,000 and prison sentences from three months to two years.

By its drastic reform measures, the Government hopes to restore the confidence of the Canadian electorate in the Parliamentary and democratic system of government in the Dominion, and to educate the voting public to render an intelligent and informed verdict on election day.

The measures—two in number—will be sent to a special thirty-member committee of the House of Commons, and Mr. Power said he would recommend the consideration of compulsory voting in the Dominion. This was studied a year ago by another committee, but rejected. Since then, said the Minister, a strong support for compulsory voting had arisen in the House, and in the country.

The reform bills won support from all parties in the Home-Conservative, C.C. F and Social Credit.
