A BLOW FOR TRUTH

To those who lament the shortcomings of the younger generation and foresee the collapse under its rule, untutored handling of the noble structure of civilization its elders have reared, the on-comers might offer as an ambassador of amity Miss Anne Reilly, of Philadelphia, now or recently a visitor to New York.

At home Miss Reilly is a telephone operator, a voice, undoubtedly, with a smile. Here she was a guest in a large hotel, the corridors and rooms of which were smudged by a trivial blaze. Her fellow habitués were alarmed by the smoke that seeped into their rooms. Miss Reilly was not alarmed by it but was roused to action.

She envisaged the plight of the hotel telephone operators, beset by calls from every room she made her way, to the establishment of an elevator runner, not to the ground floor as others were doing, but to the switchboard room, high in the tower-like structure, where she seated herself and added her efficiency to the disciplined activities of the other operators on whom had fallen the task of answering the flashing lights set twinkling by nervous occupants of the house frightened by the smoke, anxious for their safety, and sure to be made increasingly nervous by even slight delay in response to their calls.

For a long time it has been The Sun's privilege to listen to the croakers who in every generation deplore the conduct of the Juniors and predict a sad ending for a world intrusted to their management; and always in the hour of their most devastating predictions, in an emergency an Anne Reilly pops up to confound their forebodings and by one sensible deed inspired by quick-wittedness and courageously accomplished blows away all the vapors they have generated.—New York Sun.

Negotiators Return From Mexico
