GAIETY IS AN ASSET

The bringing-up of children should not be made too solemn a rite—a certain elasticity and gaiety and camaraderie should be allowed to creep in, even in the most methodical and responsible households.

A mother who had been bringing up her household rather severely, and who had been engaged—in somewhat explosive fashion—in pulling up certain careless practices in which her children had been indulging, was somewhat staggered, but refreshed and enlightened, when her young son greeted her affectionately one afternoon with "Hullo, old dynamite!"

The sense of responsibility ought not to make parents unduly anxious-minded, but it should make them thoughtful as to how to avoid the two pitfalls of a domineering, almost military, discipline and a casual, go-as-you-please slackness and indifference.

Listed as a checker, may be seen the name of Joachim von Ribbentrop, whose duty it was to check the pouring of the cement into the casements of the bridge and who is now the right hand man of Herr Hitler and formerly the German ambassador to the Court of St. James.
