Rowing Out of Their Fjords

Escaping Norwegians Help British X-Ray Experiments

Norwegian patriots crossing the North Sea in rowing boats to fight for their country's freedom have helped British scientists to make important experiments in X-ray photo-

Radiographic Technical and Demonstration Department) have been developing what might be called mass miniature radiography that is, the taking of X-ray photographs with a miniature camera so that large numbers of people can be examined for tuberculosis and heart disease quickly and economically.

The Norwegians took part in these experiments because their Londor headquarters welcomed the chance to find out their state of health. Some of them crossed to Britain after the raid on the Lofoten Islands: others, acting on their own initiative, descended to the fjords under of darkness and pushed off in tiny craft smaller even than those in which their Viking ancestors once crossed the North Sea. Between fifty and sixty men who had got; to Dakar, in French West Africa, came on from there. A feature of their X-ray photographs is the abnormal development of the chest muscles, resulting from long hours at the oars of their small boats. Mass miniature radiography, which is used extensively in the South African diamond mines, is of great, value at the present time, when Service recruits, war factory workers and users of air-raid shelters (who might have pulmonay lesions which would be missed in the ordinary clinical examination) can be X-rayed at the rate of 300 an hour. Several thousand people are dealt with in a day or so, whereas with ordinary radiography this would take weeks, even if it could be organized at all. Moreover, the tiny negative used only 14d. against the 2s. 8d. of the usual 15 in. by 12 in. film.

CANADIAN EGG FOR U.K.

In the egg trade of Canada, the export movement of storage eggs to Great Britain is now playing a prominent part in present activities, says the Egg and Poultry Market Report of the Marketing Service, Dominion Department of Agriculture. hundred and thirty thousand cases of eggs are on contract for shipment to Britain this fall, and Canada has been asked to furnish all possible additional storage eggs. In consequences of this request, the Special Products Board has ordered that all eggs of exportable grades in storage i to be delivered for export. Exceptions to of the sale, the balance to be securthis order are made for eggs held in Gnr. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in collaboration with the Commonwealth-Air Training Plan is currently presenting a series' of weekly programmes describing the many aspects of this-great Empire scheme - Gerald Noxon is the author of the stories which deal with all phases of the conduct and training of personnel.

The broadcasts are presented on Wednesday nights at 10.30 p.m. EDET over a coast to coast network of the CBC.

Shown in the photograph is a wireless air gunner receiving instruction on one of the many practice_ranges employed in their . training. Explanations of the work by experts form part of each broadcast and many students and instructors are heard in the interviews arranged by CBC producer lan Smith.
