Pass Around Economy Tips

It's Common Courtesy Says Writer, to Help Your Neighbor This Way Nowadays

Nobody is apt to advise you to cut down on courtesy while you are learning war economy, says Margaret Kenndale, writing on Common Courtesy. In fact, you can be courteous with your economy by sharing your budget and buying securites as fast as you can find them out.

If you are of a shop that repairs radios and electric appliances quickly and reasonably, tell Mrs. Jones about it.

If you find a butcher around the bend who saves you money by adjusting your about-choppy cuts of meat, don't keep it to yourself.

If you find you save on groceries by not eating it to your next-door neighbor. Maybe the two of you can share the shopping you go one day, she the next.

If you learn to sew at a free sewing centre, drop a hint to Hannah Hopkins when she's wondering how on earth she'll ever manage the money to cover the easy chair this spring.

Not sharing your savings courtesy necessarily continues to telling people how and where you get your budget bargains.

You can share your own methods of saving paper and metal; you can teach Sally Sampson how to mend her ironing cord. You might mention the "how to" save vitamins when you cook pieces you read in the paper.

And you even could give out the gardening hints you gathered last in these little ways now.

New Transformers Went Into Service In Acton Sunday

In Acton, has multiplied eight times the requirements of 1920.

Perhaps there's a reason back of the smooth switch-over here on Sunday. One never knows, but we did notice that Superintendent Wilson and Gordon Smith were on the job with the Ontario Commission employees and we couldn't help overhear the parting remark of the official in charge as he left after completing the job. "Thanks Charlie. We have been receiving good crowds at those Friday night affairs and a number of new faces each time—but we would still like to see more. It is open to anyone and everyone who feels the urge for good fellowship and recreation."

Last Monday night a hockey team arrived in Acton to play against the group of young fellows, got together by the V's Men's Club. The visiting team came from Hamilton. On arrival at the rink, they were amazed at the size of the arena and expressed delight when they saw the shining sheet of ice. They said they never expected to see such a large rink or such a fine sheet of ice. At hockey, these boys showed outstanding ability. They outskated, outplayed and outscored our boys to an outrageous score of 11 to 1. There is actually no comparison with the two teams, but when we consider the fact our boys had only been together twice for a practice before the game, but aside from the bad score, great promise has been shown by many of the Acton players, and if given the opportunity to play will no doubt be the outstanding players for Acton in the near future. After the game, both teams and referee Norm. Morton of the Intermediates came up to the Y.M.C.A. and sandwiches, cake and coffee were quickly disposed of by both teams. The Hamilton boys left for home, with the memories of an enjoyable evening.
