Good Market for Christmas Turkeys

The Christmas market looks good for turkeys, says A. C. Taylor, who has charge of the raising of turkeys at the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa. There's plenty of feed available as a result of the recent record grain crops, but, he says, if producers want to make the best profit, the birds should be in prime condition before being killed.

There's no hard and fast rule as to how to fatten turkeys for market. The principal demand is for top grade birds.

"The special feeding of turkeys for Christmas trade should be started at once," says Mr. Taylor. Birds on the range should not be penned during the intensive feeding period. Give them plenty of feed and they won't go far away. It's well to provide some protection for them from cold winds and bad weather. Mr. Taylor recommends feeding the birds during the fattening period three times daily and the feed should be a good mash in the morning and home grown grains at noon and in the evening. A good mash is made of equal parts of ground oats, barley meal or ground buckwheat and ground wheat with 10 per cent beef meal and 2 per cent ground charcoal added. The mash should be moist, but not sloppy. Any left when the birds have satisfied themselves should be taken away. Water, grit and shell should always be available.

Additional information on how to feed turkeys to get the most profit can be obtained from the nearest Dominion Experimental Farm or Agricultural Representative. There's going to be no difficulty in selling well-fleshed turkeys this year at an attractive price but poorly finished birds will be difficult to market.

Four-fifths of the air consists of nitrogen, and legumes, by making use of this supply which is not available to other plants, are able to conserve the supply of nitrogen in the soil.

Ration Coupons Can Not Be Used Before Valid Date

Retailers who accept ration coupons which have not yet become valid are liable to prosecution, the Ration Division of Warlike Prices and Trade, pointed out. Last week a Halifax grocer was fined $15 for accepting sugar coupons before their valid date.

In addition, the householder who purchases a rationed commodity and surrenders coupons which have not yet become valid whether it is done intentionally or inadvertently will suffer later because when all the coupons are gone no more will be available until the new books are issued.

Householders and retailers are reminded that only coupons No. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 have become valid, the latter two having become valid Nov. 2. Coupons No. 7 and 8 will not become valid until Nov. 30; No. 9 and 10, Dec. 28; No. 11 and 12, Jan. 25, 1943; and No. 13, Feb. 22, 1943.

The Ration Division points out to householders that they should make sure that the retailer with whom they do not detach coupons ahead of their valid date. Both retailer and customer are responsible in this regard.

Scenes are changed on Britain's Railway Platforms Nowadays as Recruits for Women's Services Leave Their Homes

BY DOUGLAS AMARON

LONDON.—There are strange scenes on the British railway platform as Troop Train, 1942 model, pulls out for its destination.

Strange, that is, compared with what you envisage a troop train to be a string of dingy coaches, dingier than ever in the half light of dreary London station, with soldiers hanging from every window, smiling, and mothers and sweethearts looking up at them, trying to smile through their tears.

The mothers and sweethearts are there all right, at this 1942 train, and some of the soldiers, too. But their positions have changed. The mothers and soldiers are on the platform. The girls sisters, daughters and sweethearts are aboard the train.

For this troop train is a Women's Auxiliary Air Force train, taking the 20 to 24-year-old girls to a reception centre where their civilian life ends for the duration and they doff their dresses for the blue tunic and skirt of the Air Force. They aren't a special train, but they call it the W.A.A.F. train because it carries so many recruits. Britain's women folk are joining the services in a steady stream.

Respirators Too

You can spot the girls as soon as you reach the station. They all have similarly-sized suitcases their notice to report tells them to bring a "small bag." They are carrying civilian respirators, and no one but a girl going to join the forces has carried those. Some say it wasn't necessary.

And, in that dreary station, they all look "tatty." It's early morning and most of them have been too excited to sleep much the night before. What's more, they're in old clothes—something they can wrap in brown paper and send home when they get their uniforms. You see reams of paper, too, for they have to take that themselves. But they're a cheerful lot as they find their seats in the crowded train, too cheerful, really, because you know those are "stage" smiles to make it easier for those who've come to see them off, and that inside they're a little scared.

Smiles in Farewell

Farewells are in keeping with the smiles. Soldiers promise to meet their sweethearts "on the battlefield." Mothers contributed a maternal caution to keep warm and to write often. The serious farewells were spoken in privacy at home.

It seems no time before the whistle blows, doors bang shut and the train snakes out of the station. Then there are last minute good-byes, more serious now a parting "God bless" and "good luck." Girls are at every window, handkerchiefs are waving and wiping noses and eyes alternately.

And as the train disappears, the mothers and the menfolk go home for a cup of tea, the mothers crying a little and the men wondering at this strange world where women too must go to war.

BRITAIN TO SEIZE ALL UNUSED CARS

A British plan for requisitioning automobiles and tires was disclosed recently in an order for an immediate census of all unused vehicles and tires.

Compensation will be paid after evaluation.

Bicycles, motorcycles and vehicles carrying more than seven persons, including the driver, are not included. Some 1,000,000 cars have been laid up in Britain since gasoline rationing was instituted early in the war.

WOOD PULP USED IN WAR

Smoking powder is the propellant that hurls every bullet and shell of modern warfare.

In normal times smokeless powder is made from cotton linters, the short fuzz remaining on the cottonseed after the longer, spinable fibres are removed in the gin. But to-day's war demands are so great that the cellulose and hemicellulose of the Pacific Northwest and the slash pines of the South. Much pulpwood, as well as prepared wood-pulp, also is imported from Canada. During the first half of 1942, more than a third of the cellulose going to American military powder was from wood-pulp and it is estimated that in 1943 this proportion will be 60 per cent.

WIEN 20,000 DIED

LONDON, (CP)—The Quetta (India) earthquake of May 31, 1935, when 30,000 people died, is recalled by the death of Lt.-Gen. Sir Henry Karankee, 63, who as general commanding the district organized rescue work.

PHILOSOPHY AND DAILY LIFE

A newspaper joker remarks that the philosophers can tell how the social system should be reformed, but some of them can't fix a window cord when it gets out of order.

It is a wonderful thing for people to develop a wise philosophy which seems to solve national and social problems. Sometimes that philosophy lacks application to daily life, because it does not provide for simple problems like fixing the window cord. To be a real philosopher, people should not merely try to solve problems from book study. They should have ideas from somebody's practical experience, as to whether their plans will command the co-operation of the people, and avoid the antagonisms that have wrecked countless schemes for improving the human lot.

ARMY GIRLS' STUDIES

LONDON, (CP)—Girls serving in the Auxiliary Territorial Services have been given a chance to study child psychology and domestic science. The courses are part of a new educational experiment for service men and women.
