He plans to visit relatives and friends on the Prairies on the way home. A concluding sentence reads: "However, no matter where I travel, I do not forget Acton and the many memories coupled into one train it would extend 153 miles—from Halifax to beyond Montreal, or the entire route of the International Ltd. from Montreal to Chicago via Toronto with four miles to spare. This long train would consist of 90,253 freight cars, 3,343 passenger cars and 7,127 work cars. These figures were included in the System's annual report for 1942, recently tabled in the House of Commons."
