A BIT OF ENGLAND IN SOUTH AMERICA

BOGOTA, Columbia (CP)—In the heart of this South American capital there is an acre of ground that is "forever England"—the Protestant cemetery that was dedicated over to the British government as a token of Columbian gratitude for the part played by Englishmen in helping them win their independence from Spain.

The British cemetery is located on the fringe of one of Bogota's modern residential districts and adjoins the vastly larger Roman Catholic cemetery. For more than a century the ground has been "foreign territory." Within its walls lie the remains of many British and Americans who have died far from their homelands.
