Already V-J Day seems aeons away, since time comes now, measured by events, rather than by days or weeks.

Strangely enough, V-J Day coincided with the termination of our son's thirty-day furlough and we had fond hopes when the good news broke that it might facilitate his discharge which he had applied for, since his dad is no longer able to carry on alone.

But could he get it, or even an extension of leave? The answer is "no, a thousand times no". But neither was his request rejected so I suppose all the letters, papers and affidavits are lying forgotten in some little pigeon hole until someone gets around to digging them out. Apparently the only way an ordinary soldier can earn recognition from his superiors is to go AWOL. And then he finds out in a hurry how much the army needs him and how determined it is to get him back. Not that son Bob has even tried anything quite so drastic—too much depends on him for him to take any chances like that. There is so much work waiting to be done at home.

"The way of the army is hard to fathom, when a man of his own free will enlists, that's fine. But let that same man, no matter how urgently needed at home, try to get out, then we soon find out how much our "volunteer" system amounts to. Dire distress can take place in a soldier's home while military authorities work their way through the tangle of red tape that impedes their every movement. At such a time it is easy for us, as civilians, to blame the government, irrespective of what party is in power. And, while no doubt the government is directly responsible for the country's military policy, yet we also have to remember that army discipline is so strict that no officer can overstep his authority in any way, shape or form. He cannot grant favors. He must obey orders even though he knows those orders are due for cancellation as soon as word comes through. We have only to study history to know that to be true. The tragic story of the "Charge of the Light Brigade" is a striking example. To quote Tennyson's graphic description:

"Forward, the Light Brigade!
Was there a man dismayed?
Not though the soldier knew
Someone had blundered."

And at home here on the farm we have threshing to do, oats to draw in and barley to cut and son Bob, because a wire from headquarters has been held up some place, is on draft for Camp Borden? Partner isn't able to cut the barley; we can't draw in oats until we have threshed; and we can't thresh until Bob gets back home to look after things. And the threshing machine is on the line and will probably want to move in sometime tomorrow. We are also afraid to leave the house very long in case "long distance" should call. If I have to go out I generally wait Partner to listen for the phone. But that idea doesn't work too well because he generally falls asleep if he is left in the house too long alone. I tell him his guardianship is parallel to that of King Alfred and the cakes.

Since I had to be in the house so much lately I thought it might be a good idea to get a room papered—a job that has been hanging fire for some time. Our young niece Betty is staying with us so it occurred to me that with her help I might even be able to paper the ceiling—a job I have never yet tackled alone.

The ceiling was low enough that I could reach it from a chair and the room not so terribly big. So I hope-fully cut and measured one strip of paper. I thought one piece would be enough to experiment with. Well, I wrestled with that piece of evil for nearly an hour—pasting and repasting. At one time I had it wrapped around me like a winding sheet and of course I finished up by tearing it into any number of pieces. In desperation I came downstairs and phoned a neighbor "How do you get one end of a strip to stay on a ceiling while you fix the other?" I asked.

Well, after she had finished laughing at me she said—"You just leave it for now and I will come down after supper and help you."

So that was that. The ceiling was done that night and Betty and I papered the walls next day. It is grand to have neighbors and nice! Another telephone call.

Bob, from downtown — he was on parade and all ready to move out to Camp Borden when his name was called and he was sent back home again. "All's well that ends well" so they say.
