Canadian Press Staff Writer

For the first time in her long history, Japan has been completely defeated and now is undergoing occupation of her soil by foreign and victorious enemies.

Under the shock of that humiliation Japanese society, rent by recriminations among its military, industrial, agricultural and administrative leaders, would almost certainly dissolve into confusion and render effective Allied occupation and reconstruction impossible unless the focal point of Japanese loyalty and obedience, the imperial throne, were retained. By that means alone, it is maintained, can Japanese unity and the essential minimum of national self-respect be preserved.

In his broadcast, Hirohito repeated the lie that Japan had only attacked the United States and Britain out of a sincere desire to ensure Japan's self-preservation and the stability of East Asia, without any thought of infringing on the sovereignty of other countries or of territorial aggrandizement.

Moreover, by his statement that Japan had been defeated by "a new and most cruel bomb," he was laying the foundation for a legend of a martyred country.

Emperor or no, the essential tasks after the thorough disarming of Japan are:

1. To instill into the minds of the people that their behavior has earned the disgust of the civilized world;
2. To eradicate the secret police and the secret network of societies and associations which enabled the militarists to saturate the masses with their doctrines.

Figures showing that there were 1,601 Canadian prisoners last July 30 in the main islands of Japan were produced by a Japanese Foreign Office official at Yokohama. The official claimed the figures were accurate up to that date and were official. Although the official's records differ from the latest Canadian record, observers considered his picture of the situation encouraging.

After the fall of Hong Kong, December 25, 1941, where Canada's contingent numbered about 1,285 men, the Japanese reported they took 1,689 prisoners. The official could give no records of Canadian prisoners outside Japan, but listed numbers of Canadian civilian internees in assembly huts in China. No totals were available for Canadian civilians interned in Japan proper.

A committee of Germans has sent an urgent request to Thomas Mann, famed novelist-philosopher, to return to his native Germany and help in the rebirth of his country.

Berlin radio, meanwhile, announced the capture by the Allies of Martin Borman, chief deputy of the Nazi party and Hitler's right-hand man. Borman is first on the list of Nazi to be tried next month at Nuremberg for war crimes. Others on the list are Hermann Goering, Hjalmar Schacht, former Reichbank president; diplomat Franz von Papen; Admiral Karl Doenitz and Field Marshal Wilhelm Keitel; Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop; Robert Ley, labor front chief; Alfred Rosenberg, propagandist; Hans Frank, governor-general of Poland and SS general; Ernst Kaltenbrunner, chief of the Reich security department; Wilhelm Strelcher, gauleiter of Franconia; Dr. W. Funk, Reichbank president; Baldur von Schirach, youth movement chief and ruler of Vienna; Albert Speer; construction organization chief and notorious advocate of slave labor; Alfred Jodl, Wehrmacht chief of staff; Constantin von Neurath, president of secret cabinet council; Dr. Arthur Seyss-Inquart, Netherlands commissioner; and Erich Raeder, former commander-in-chief of the German navy.

Most of the 24 defendants have already been lodged in Nuremberg jail near the courthouse where their fate will be decided. A few defendants remain temporarily in British and Russian hands, but will join the Nuremberg lineup shortly.

The list of Japanese war criminals is climbing steadily as more and more Allied prisoners are released from camps in the Orient. The men of Hong Kong are being freed and the story of how the Canadians found the defence of the crown colony is unfolding.

Col. R. S. Malone, director of public relations for the Canadian Army, says there were 1,985 Canadians, members of the Winnipeg Grenadiers, the Royal Rifles of Canada and a brigade headquarters, at Hong Kong. Of these some 296 men died in the fighting or were missing. Some of these known prisoners have died since.

Associated Press War Correspondent Vern Haugland is the first Allied witness of the actual devastation of Hiroshima where the first atomic bomb dropped. Haugland describes streets where not a single building was left standing. All that was left standing of what Japan once boasted was her most modernized city was less than a dozen buildings.

British and Indian troops landed at Singapore Wednesday from "light craft" at the main wharf of the great naval base. They reported that the Japanese had set fire to the oil tank farm at Port Dickson, in apparent violation of the surrender terms. The great far eastern base had been in Japanese hands since its capture by the Japanese early in 1942.

Premier Prince Higashi-Kuni finally admitted publicly that Japan has surrendered to the Allies. The word "surrender" was used for the first time in separate speeches to the two houses of the Japanese Diet and reported by the Japanese news agency Domei. The premier urged the Japanese to admit frankly their defeat and to fulfill faithfully the Potsdam declaration terms to "prove to all the world the true worth of our pledged word."

Mrs. Diers, a former member of the staff, will act as supply teacher until Mr. McCallum returns. A number from here attended a most successful picnic held by the County C.C.F. at Archie Service's flats, Milton, on Sunday afternoon last. During the afternoon races were run off, and horseshoe pitching contests held. A picnic lunch was served and all who attended report a grand outing. W.
