Nova Scotia Plans Survey of Streams

Depleted Sports Fishing Lakes To Be Rehabilitated With Stock

HALIFAX (CP)—The Nova Scotia department of Industry and Publicity has embarked on a program to rehabilitate the sports fishing streams and lakes of this province. The first step was to be a survey of all main fishing streams, to obtain the information needed for a scientific approach to the problem. Dr. Douglas L. Cooper, fisheries director of the province, has announced that Dr. F. R. Hayes, professor of biology at Dalhousie University, has been retained by the department to supervise the survey and make recommendations to the provincial government. There was more to the problem than filling depleted streams with hatchery stock, Dr. Cooper explained. Unless conditions were favorable for fish life, the streams and lakes so stocked would be depleted again in a short time. The fisheries director said no complete survey had ever been made in Nova Scotia and consequently the department had to start at the beginning. Maine and New Hampshire have made these surveys. On the basis of the information obtained, they have been able to rehabilitate successfully many of their fishing streams.

The Week at OTTAWA

BY H. DENT HODGSON Canadian Press Staff Writer OTTAWA, FEB. (CP)—Canada has taken her first cautious step toward the peace time goal of unrestricted prices and wages, but the government announcement of removal of price ceilings on some 300 articles and services indicates the step is being accompanied by an iron grip on the apron-strings of wartime price control.

The release of certain luxuries or near-luxuries to find their own price levels in the open market is strictly experimental, and the success of this experiment will determine the time and extent of further relaxations. Prime Minister Mackenzie King and Finance Minister Hiley, announcing the move, made it clear that price behavior on the newly freed articles will be closely watched, and that the ceilings will be clamped down again if prices run rampant. Mr. Hiley warned that "speculation or withholding of goods from the market would result in the board exercising its powers of requisition at former ceiling prices."

It was unlikely however that the prices of the goods freed would result in drastic price changes. The goods affected cover a wide range and include firearms, books, games, tobacco and cigars, shaving accessories, and price of gas, electricity, telephone or telephone service, transportation, art objects, cameras and women's millinery. Some of the items affected are classed as "household necessities" affecting the basic cost of living. All are in good supply, Mr. Hiley indicated that a drop in prices of some of the articles might actually result. Prices Board Chairman Donald Gordon urged suppliers and producers to co-operate by maintaining existing prices and publishing widely their intention to do so. This would make the first step successful "and enable us to proceed much more rapidly with other plans which now are in tentative form."

In conjunction with the price ceiling removals came relaxations in wage controls. National and regional war labour boards will remain, but upward adjustments of wages now may be made when it is found that wages are low in comparison with those from the same or comparable occupations in the same locality. In stresses may also be made if the board feels that would be reasonable in the circumstances and consistent with the maintenance of existing prices of the goods and services which the employer sells. Formerly, the boards could authorize increases only where a "gross inequality of injustice" existed. The wartime salaries order was amended to make adjustment possible where special cases of hardship or unfairness might exist. Freedom in collective bargaining between the employer and employee on such matters as vacations with pay, off-shift differentials, hospital and pension plans also was announced.

The wage and price relaxations brought little comment from labor or industrial leaders or from the general public. Like the government, they were waiting to see what happened. The co-ordinating committee of the Dominion-provincial conference, composed of the provincial premiers and federal cabinet ministers, met behind closed doors last week for some private negotiations in the taxation fields. Friday the committee adjourned to April 25 with an announcement that "substantial progress" had been made.

Under pressure from the premiers, the Dominion government apparently retreated somewhat from its earlier proposals that the provinces give up the income succession and corporation tax fields in return for fixed grants-in-aid to the provinces, based on population. One premier said the Dominion had definitely agreed to move out of the inheritance tax field in exchange for exclusive jurisdiction in the income tax field and it was believed the Dominion might exchange other fields of direct taxation for exclusive federal jurisdiction in corporation taxation. Federal authorities also were reported to have agreed at one point in the conference to increase the proposed per capita subsidy to the provinces from $12 to $15, but whether this might be subject to further negotiation was not clear.

However, the prime minister said at the close of the conference that he was "very much pleased" with the outcome of discussions, and delegates who alternately wore glum and cheerful expressions as the sessions progressed through the week seemed to share the view that much had been accomplished. The work now goes to the economic committee of the conference, composed of technical experts of the ten governments, who will iron out difficulties posed by the revision of the proposed agreements. REGINA, Sask. (CP)—Regina groped in a two-hour blackout recently after a join in the main stream line blew out in the city's power plant. Merchants were stormed for candles while thousands of persons were caught on street cars on their way home from work.
