A Membership to Retain

In spite of heavy commitments at home and abroad, involving millions of dollars, the magnificent financial support which the people of Ontario have given the Canadian Red Cross makes it unnecessary for the organization to appeal for funds until 1947. Mr. C. Bruce Hill, President of the Ontario Division of Red Cross announced. Branches of the Canadian Red Cross are, however, holding simultaneous membership drives from March 1 to March 9th. For six years of war, because every sixth Canadian was a member of Red Cross, the Society was able to do those things for our Armed Forces, our Prisoners of War, and for civilian war sufferers which many times meant the difference between life and death and which always brought comfort and mercy where and when it was most needed.

If the Red Cross is to remain a strong and potent factor in the improvement of health, the prevention of suffering and the mitigation of suffering throughout the world, (aims of Red Cross listed in its charter), its membership must be maintained at a high level.

A strong membership will enable the Canadian Red Cross to begin the operation of its new Free Blood Transfusion Service; and of its Outpost Hospitals on isolated frontiers, to bring mercy and comfort to gallant and disabled veterans and health happiness and comfort to many people through the Society's many other humanitarian services.

The strength of the Red Cross is in its members and because they stood solidly united within the organization it was possible for Red Cross to develop its great war undertakings. What Red Cross did in war, it can do in peace, providing the membership continues strong and vigorous.

Residents are urged to become members of their respective Red Cross Branches and thus ensure continuance of the great work to which the Red Cross has sponsored.

Canada and its Weekly Newspapers

People across Canada in recent years have become familiar with the slogan adopted by the weekly press, "Serving those important parts of Canada that lie outside the cities." How well the home town weeklies serve the Canadian public is revealed in facts and figures recently compiled from a national survey undertaken to prove that "the weeklies go into the home." It has long been beyond dispute that they form the first media entering the home to be read by all members of the family able to read, and the advertisements appearing in them are read faithfully along with the news. At the risk of becoming tedious by quoting figures, we feel that the story cannot be told without them. Here goes:

The weekly press of Canada now serves virtually all of rural Canada's residents 5,276,328 living in centres of less than 10,000 population. Another fact brought out is that nearly 40 per cent. of rural homes are not daily newspaper subscribers but depend solely on their "home town" weekly for news, editorials and matters of general interest of town and district.

Figures are carried further to show the importance of the rural weeklies in that of 663 members of parliament, dominion and provincial, only 145 come from cities. Members frequently quote weeklies in House debates, get their cue from home-town papers.

All of which adds up to the scarcely debatable proposition that the weeklies are the "basic" advertising media through which to reach rural Canada when advertising products and services, national or local.

Besides the general loyalty of rural people in supporting their home town paper there are other factors of growing importance that have increased the support and general readership of rural weeklies. With many of the smaller centres having important industries, the leadership given by editors in promoting industrial harmony has done much to prevent strikes and keep industry on an even keel. This "tone" is appreciated among people who recognize a fair and enlightened approach by increased circulation. Bowmanville Statesman.

An Old Argument

There have been and probably always will be sources of contention between successive generations. Crusty convention and hide-bound thinking is youth's questionable valuation of its parents' way of life. The conflict has developed with new intensity in one sphere which supposedly is soothing to the senses and an incentive to companionship music.

There is the exception of the 14-year-old pianist who said recently in Toronto that popular music is "terrible" proving the rule that the younger generation likes swing. Father may not like the three B.S.'s, Brahms, Beethoven and Bach but he will certainly stand up for "Down by the Old Mill Stream" against "Chickery Chick."

Each generation cherishes the songs of its youth with nostalgic fervor that colors its view of the musical products of a later day. Recognition is a prime factor in the average layman's appreciation of music.

The study of jazz as an artistic form has attracted many new adherents in the last ten years. Serious criticisms of the various styles of the modern musical technique have become a feature of trade papers and magazines read by the general public.

But the ardor of lovers of classical music has shown no signs of flagging and their ranks also have new recruits. Most large cities have at least one symphony orchestra and "pop" concerts draw listeners who are enthusiastic if not as noisy as the swaying fans of swing bands.

The parent versus child theme in the musical world was played most graphically in the argument between the Strauss's, father and son, who quarreled bitterly about the style of waltz which the young Johann was writing.

Solace can be found by today's swing sad patients when they realize that in 25 years, the bobby soxer and her boy friend will be looking askance at the musical gyrations of their own children.

Clean-Up

The Ontario Securities Commission under C. P. McLague is cracking down on brokerage houses which do not play according to the rules. Last week three Toronto firms lost their registrations and four salesmen had their registration cancelled. The commission also stated its investigating staff is carrying out a number of investigations into suspected violators of both the Ontario Securities Act and the Criminal Code.

In the interests of the good name of Ontario and the brokerage business as a whole, it is well that the cleanup has been started. The sweep has been over due for some time.

Uniformity is Desirable

A movement seems to be crystallizing in Canada to have daylight saving time for a uniform period viz., April 29 to September 29 and we note that various towns and cities have supported this move and are proclaiming "Fast time" during that period. The suggestion seems to have emanated from the Railways Association which is preparing its summer schedule. The dates suggested start at 12:01 a.m. Sunday, April 28th, continuing until 12:01 a.m. Sunday, September 29th.

Uniformity is desirable. In a day when there is so much travelling from place to place, when we listen to radio programs and newscasts, and when we are more dependent on one another, it is exasperating to find one town on different hours than another town, and this tended to make the whole movement unpopular.

There are so many advantages in moving the clocks forward an hour during the summer-months that townspeople are practically unanimous in their support of the matter. Nor is it too upsetting for farm people.

EDITORIAL NOTES

If you really want to replace war with peace, let war between you and the next man cease.

March was certainly very lamb-like in its entrance and why worry about its exit.

Somebody has figured out that there are only seven weeks to figure up your income tax.

We might worry less about when our soldiers are coming home and more about what they will find when they get here.

Those days of fine warm sunshine do make us break and give a promise that whatever winter storms do come, their effect won't be lasting long.

The speech from the Throne at the opening of the Ontario Legislature on Monday gave promise of many enactments which are intended to be beneficial to Ontario as a whole. The details will be eagerly anticipated, especially the "improvements" in the control of liquor in the Province.

Successful Battle Against Grain Insects

The farm wife who is troubled with ants in her pantry or beetles in her flour barrel is not alone in having insect trouble. Sooner or later everyone who stores food is faced with the problem of protecting it from insects. Naturally the biggest problem falls to those who store the largest quantity of food such as the grain elevator operators who store millions of bushels of grain every year.

Few people viewing a grain elevator with its clean walls of thick concrete think of it as being subject to the invasion of insects. Yet ants, beetles, and moths are sometimes busily at work within its bins cutting furiously and multiplying as they eat into grain elevator in certain parts of the Dominion, the Indian meal moth finds it easy and便宜 to get into the bins of golden wheat. The eggs hatch and the larvae eat the favorite food, the germ of the grain, which they greedily scoop out. The larvae of another pest, the confused grain beetle also burrows into the grain. The immature stage of the grain weevil is not so particular as it follows out the entire kernel, leaving it a mere shell.

These troubles developed when Canada was at war and endeavoring to supply Great Britain with maximum food as possible when guns and tanks and planes and men competed with grain for space on crowded ships. To aid in normal times, the ever-vigilant insects found little opportunity to establish themselves in Canada's fast-moving grain stores but with the outbreak of war huge stocks of grain piled up, affording an unusual opportunity for the insect subversive.

During the past five years, H. L. Gray of the Division of Entomology, Dominion Department of Agriculture and H. N. Smallman of the Board of Grain Commissioners have been directing the battle against insects entrenched in stored grain. So successfully had been their campaign that the insects are now in retreat. In 1943 insect pests were found in a large percentage of the bins examined ed by their government officials; by 1945, the infestation in these same elevators had been reduced by 73 per cent. and in many of the elevators it was practically impossible to find any living insects.

The entomologists began their campaign by recommending methods of insect control and showing the elevator owners and operators how to apply these methods. Their work was effective, but only to degree.

These two entomologists in the spring of 1943 invited grain elevator representatives to attend a short course in insect control which was held at Montreal, Toronto, Fort William and Vancouver. For four days at each of these centres a total of 267 representative of 92 different grain storage organizations received training. Trained to lecture, examine live and dead grain insects and ask pointed questions.

When the course was over, participants were encouraged to apply what they learned to one of the 100,000 elevators in Canada. This provided an ideal situation that could hardly be difficult to try there. This activity has been carried on under the supervision of the National Research Council for the protection and elevation of the home-grown grain crop. Sanitary measures, if severe infestation should become dangerous, recommended by the government entomologists are used. Several materials are available which are cultural, chemical, or physical and may be applied directly to grain and may be applied to the top of the bin and will penetrate to the bottom, killing the insects as they are. If the infestation is in the surface of the grain, the Indian meal moth, the insects are destroyed by fog-like spray of ten per cent pyrethrum in a high grade kerosene oil, which, on evaporation, leaves no trace on the grain. The knowledge of their value and the consistency of the modern fumigants and spray combined with good housekeeping practices have largely eliminated the hazard of insect infestation. This work will be continued for the protection of Canadian wheat standards, to the mutual advantage of grain producers, handlers and consumers.
