Learning to Swim

It is one of the tragedies of summer that many drowning accidents occur. Some youngsters steal off without permission, to go swimming without having had proper instruction in that art. It is highly probable that boys and girls learn to swim, and learn under careful instruction. It is a fine thing if they can join a swimming class or if some careful person who is a good swimmer will undertake to teach them.

If there is no swimming place in one's home town, some might be able to get good instruction if they were taken to some near-by town or resort. Many get a chance to learn at the camps where they spend time, or at resorts where their families spend vacations.

An ability to swim may save people's lives. If a boat or canoe capsizes, those who can swim will probably escape. Even when people have acquired the swimming art, they need to exercise caution. Some are too venturesome. Anyway, swimming is mighty fine exercise and helps greatly to develop physical power.

OLDER WORKERS

Surveys conducted in Canada and elsewhere prove that workers in middle life are generally the best types of employees. Far from being "washed up" at 45, the older worker is less likely to be away from work without good cause, has greater stability and is less likely to have an accident. To this, point out the authorities, must be added the value of experience acquired by years on the job.

The surveys were particularly important in view of the estimates that more than five million Canadians will be more than 45 years old in 1971.
