Me for Me

By Joseph Lister Rutledge

The recent threatened railroad strike has had—at least so we hope—a sobering effect on public thinking. For a few days the country stood face to face with a threat that might, for the time, have set it back a century, to where the horse and the slow water haul were the only means of transportation. With no coal or oil or gas, highway traffic, to which our age is geared would soon have been at an end. Food would have rotted in the fields for lack of means of distribution. Cities would have been starved and uninhabitable because their necessary services are dependent on the railroads. Whole industries would have had to close and tens of thousands of people, who had no personal interest in the dispute would have been without work or wages.

These things did not happen, but the threat was there. That threat has made the public acutely aware that such a condition must not be, because the costs and the gains are disproportionate and ill-distributed, the cost to a whole people and the possible gain to a relative few. This is no criticism of the railroad men. They were following a well-beaten path that leads to nowhere. They were no more irresponsible than any other strikers. They were no worse than the non-striking citizens who believe that a demand that is economically or politically powerful enough carries its own justification.

It is perhaps the first step to constructive thinking to realize that there is a penalty for economic sin, and that sin is that anyone should use power to assure ends to which he is not entitled by the circumstances, or that benefit one at the expense of another. It is evident in the "me for me" attitude that is a threat to the organized society in which we all live, for, pushed to its logical extreme, it means the end of organized society and a return to the tooth and claw of the jungle. It is well that the farmer should have realized that his year's work was at stake that the public should recognize that their safety and their comfort and their ability to live in their world was also in jeopardy that they should realize that their rights, the right to work and to move from place to place and to be secure under the organized society they had established, cannot be subject to the whim or the prejudice or the possible greed of anyone. Society, which means all of us, not some favored, or some powerful group, must protect all its members, for the essence of society is that it should provide a way of living together and not by any compulsion, but of our own free choice.

PLEASURE OF SUMMER

If there was a contest between the various seasons to see which should be considered the most popular, the summer-time might get the most votes. The spring-time is fascinating in its budding hope and its promise of the future, but many raw and chilly days of that season create something of an obstacle to maximum enjoyment.

The autumn is wonderful in its finished glories but there are hints of coming winter that are not so pleasant. The summer-time has to contend with plenty of hot weather which is likely to make people uncomfortable. Yet there are so many compensations for any discomfort caused by heat, and people so love their summer pleasures that the season is highly popular.

In spring and fall there are in most climates many days when people need some warm garments and when chilly weather places restrictions on various sports and pastimes. In the nice summertime these restrictions disappear, and the door is wide open to a wonderful variety of sports and diversions.

There are typical scenes in which the joy of summertime is seen in all its happiness. One of the most common is that of the people swimming and bathing at popular places, gaining vigor and refreshment from the cool feel of the water. One common scene is that of water craft, moving over the pleasant surface of lakes, rivers and oceans, by the use of motor, sail or human power. A typical sight is that of the crowd at the ball games, cheering on their favorite teams and players, and applauding fine plays.

So there is no end of pleasant summer diversions which make people happy. They are encouraged to spend plenty of time outdoors and do active things. So the summertime passes quickly, and ends all too soon.

Test Vitamin Oils In Mixed Feeds

The vitamin fortification of commercial mixed feeds, especially poultry feeds, is common practice. It is important that vitamins be added in sufficient quantities to meet the needs of the animals or birds to be fed. But it is also important that the cost of the feeds is not increased unnecessarily through wasteful use of these costly vitamins. In order to produce economically, feeds which are nutritionally complete, manufacturers must therefore know the potency of the vitamin supplements they use.

For some years now the Plant Products Division of the Dominion Department of Agriculture, which administers The Feeding Stuffs Act, has been checking the vitamin A and D guarantees made by manufacturers of feeding oils. Such oils are the most commonly used vitamin supplements.

When this work was started many discrepancies were found. Some firms met their guarantees fairly consistently, others were badly out of times. Most firms whose guarantees were out, were as often above as below their guarantees. This indicated that they were having difficulties in blending or testing.

The tests for these vitamins are very delicate and subject to wide errors, unless proper methods and extreme care are used. Through direction and instruction it was possible to bring the testing methods of manufacturers in-line, with the result that recent years very few cases have been found where vitamin A and D guarantees on these feeding oils have not been met.

An Open Letter To Local Hydro

—FROM—
THE HYDRO-ELECTRIC POWER COMMISSION OF ONTARIO
 Terminal Bldg., Hamilton, Ont.

September 28, 1948
 Acton Public Utilities Commissioner, Box 445, Acton, Ontario
 Attention: Mr. J. McGeachie, Secy-Treasurer

Allocation of Available Power Supplies

Your week-day consumption of kilowatt-hours has been consistently in excess of the quota allotted your municipality and the Commission is therefore reluctantly obliged to inform you that unless your week-day consumption of kilowatt-hours is reduced to the quota which has been allotted you it will be obliged commencing October 5th, 1948, to request you to open feeders at regular intervals throughout the day until the required reduction is assured. We shall be glad to co-operate with you in arranging the time and duration of these interruptions most suited to your requirements. Failure to comply with any such request which will be transmitted to you through our operators, will make it necessary for the Commission to interrupt your power supply every hour on the hour throughout the day from dawn to dark for periods of time ranging up to fifteen minutes in duration.

It is being given as that you may have an opportunity to notify all your consumers of what to expect in the event the required production in your week-day consumption of kilowatt-hours is not forthcoming, and also so that you will have an opportunity of taking steps to safeguard all vital services during the power cut-offs, should these become necessary.
