DISCONTENTED COWS

Experience has established that cows don't like hot weather. Move the most contented cow to the tropics and according to authorities "their milk yield drops and they quiver and pant like dogs in the sun." Now some Scottish scientists are going to discover the reason why. The cows will have eight hour spells in a scientific hot box where hot damp air will bring their quarters to 112 degrees. With a series of wires attached to the cow's body the scientists will sit in a cool compartment and try to figure out what makes bony discontented. We have a rough idea that if the positions were reversed the answer could be discovered without the help of any wires. Still, we're not a scientist. — J.L.R.
