Most Income Is Wages

By Joseph Lister Rutledge
Old Commodore Vanderbilt, outlining his policy of public relations in the terse phrase "the public be damned," did himself, the industrial world, the public and the worker a very bad turn. He inaugurated a hush-hush attitude in regard to all phases of industry. Those who followed him did not share his views, but they were convinced that what industry didn't tell about itself could make no trouble for it. The young and lusty trade unions had no such inhibitions. They believed they had discovered a magic formula and wanted to tell everyone about it. Now that industry has realized that frankness pays higher dividends than reticence, it still faces the difficulty of overtaking arguments that have the inestimable advantage of being first on the ground. But, more and more, industry is realizing the need for public understanding and is doing something about it. A case in point is Anacostia American Brass Ltd. They are using visualized advertising to show that one way or another wages represent 90% of all industrial payments. That is a startling statement, not easily accepted. They argue it this way: After paying for the raw materials used in manufacture all income remaining is divided as follows: For actual wages, salaries, sickness and pension benefits 50.7%. The next item is for electric power, coal, fuel oil and other supplies. It absorbs 24.3% of all income. But what the average person has not realized is that approximately 50% of these charges also go into the pay envelopes of electric power workers, the oil or the coal men. Then there is an item of 9.1% for taxes. A considerable part of it pays the salaries of government employees, soldiers, sailors, policemen, firemen or even the tax collector. Depreciation charges represent 7.2%. They include an item of $24,000 for painting. Every one knows that the wages of the painters are sharply more than the cost of the paint they use, even where this includes a sizeable charge for other wages. Total it all up and it approximates 90% of all income for wages. Owners are satisfied, as they should be, with a smaller amount. They keep 4.7% for themselves, and another 4% is set aside for improvements and modernization. That protects the owner's property as it protects the worker's wages. We think that this is quite a story. Basically, it is the story of all industry. It is a story that needs to be told again and again. So when the public thinks of the rights of labor or the obligations of management they will think, not with opinions already set, but with an unbiased informed and open mind.

SEE THE SIGHT
I had been listening to the energetic but unsuccessful effort of a young Salt Lake City bus driver to drum up trade for his sight-seeing trip when my attention was diverted to a quaint figure walking toward us. The elderly lady, tall and graceful, wore a black lace dress that almost touched the ground and barely revealed her old-fashioned button shoes. A crocheted cape hung over her shoulders, and a large black hat with a single rose bobbed up and down with each step. The bus driver's eyes brightened. "See the sights of Salt Lake City, madam?" he asked, hopefully. The lady drew herself up. "Young man," she said with dignity, "I am one of the sights of Salt Lake City."—The Reader's Digest.

WILLING TO MEET
"Oh, darling, he murmured, 'I love you so. Please say you'll be mine. I'm not rich like Percival Brown. I haven't a car, or a fine house or a well-stocked cellar; but darling, I love you, and I cannot live without you.' Two arms stole around his neck and two ruby lips whispered in his ear, "And I love you, too, darling; but—where is this man Brown?"

J. N. O'Neil
Georgetown lost one of its pioneer businessmen when J. N. O'Neil passed away on August 10, in Toronto.
Born in 1869 in Port Hope, he came in 1890 to Alloua, in Peel County, married Elizabeth Jane Coventry in 1899, and moved to Georgetown to open a carriage shop, which in later years was an automobile agency and garage. In 1947 he retired from business. He is survived by his widow; one daughter, Mrs. Eric D. Sheeley, and one son, Arol J. O'Neil, of Toronto.
Funeral services were conducted by Archdeacon W. G. O. Thompson. Pallbearers were William Marshall, Walter Evans, J. D. Godfrey, Thos. Bird, Lt.-Col. G. Cousins and Howard Kentner.
Interment was made in Greenwood Cemetery, Georgetown.

Broken Fluorescent Lights Dangerous to Handle

When fluorescent light tubes are out of their sockets, and especially when they are broken, treat them like poison—because they are poison. Warns Laird S. Goldborough in the Reader's Digest for September. Fluorescent tubes contain a highly poisonous substance, and serious injury may strike anyone who carelessly handles a broken tube.
Although no warning is printed on the carton containing the tube, the danger is so real that the International Association of Fire Chiefs recently issued a safety bulletin headed: "Fluorescent Lamp Tubes Carry an Extreme Poison Hazard." Insurance companies in Canada and the United States are asking their agents to warn householders. The New York City Sanitation Dept. has ordered its refuse collectors to single out discarded fluorescent tubes or "kid-glove treatment" Seamen of the U.S. Navy are required to wear gloves and goggles when replacing worn-out tubes.
Industrial users of the tubes have been "lipped off" as to proper precautions. Goldborough says, but the housewife has not been told. Since 20 per cent of homes wired for electricity have one or more fluorescent lamps, the hazard to householders is serious. The Reader's Digest article cites instances of severe fluorescent-tube poisoning suffered by children who, playing with discarded tubes, have been cut by the glass. In some cases the resulting deep-seated infections, slow to heal have required surgical removal of infected tissue.
Beryllium, contained in the 200 million tubes now burning in North America is the suspected substance. The three chief fluorescent tube makers have recently agreed to stop using beryllium in their tubes, although the existing stock-pile of lamps containing beryllium will be sold.
Safety engineers complain that they cannot find out what will replace beryllium in the new tubes, the article says. Since the tubes may still contain poisonous elements, medical authorities urge continued precaution in handling.

LOCOMOTIVE HANDBOOK

Britain's Locomotive Manufacturer's Association has prepared a 464 page handbook in five languages which will act as a link between railwaymen all over the world. It has taken some years to compile and every nut, screw and bolt in a railway engine has been tabulated, shown on specially drawn diagrams and described in English, French, German, Spanish and Portuguese. It also includes a full dictionary. The purpose of the handbook is to attempt to collect information regarding locomotive building and make it available to the world, and to initiate a campaign for the standardization of terms. Britain's locomotive industry is at present booked up for two years with more than $120 million worth of orders. 80 per cent of them for overseas.

Smoke, smoke, smoke that germ to death! That used to be the rule in cleaning sickrooms twenty-five years ago, when the fumes of the sulphur candle were used. But now it is done by a systematic laundering of all sickroom material.

Mackenzie News

We have been advertising arborite for cupboard tops for some time and a great many have taken advantage of the lovely shades for a durable counter top. The installation of the sink in conjunction with the use of arborite is slightly different as a special sink rim must be used for a satisfactory job. We would advise that you consult us first so your cupboard top will be the best.

We have in stock stainless steel sinks which adapt itself for arborite perfectly. The saving in the cost of the sink rim for ordinary types of sinks brings down these stainless sinks to the equivalent price.

We are pleased to welcome to our staff Miss Kaye Foley, to give you the same helpful service that Mary has given for the past few years.

Be trying for the $100 at the Acton Park Pavilion on Saturday night.
