

The stole suit makes Spring & fashion news. This checked and solid combination slim-silhouetted suit with a checked," matched fabwie stole is typical of this particular trend. Practically, the stole can be matched with other costumes as well as with the skirt and blouses. The smartness is very casual yet deliberate as the clear contrasts winte that the wearing is very, very fashion minded. For the solid color, tops this season would be navy blue. But with the suit so very up-to-date itself, any season's color would be just as smart.

Pottery is one of the simple industries of the Midlands of Britain and in the BBC's program, "Midlands . Miscellany", Colonel Wade, himself a pottery manufacturer, told 'some stories connected with the industry. These stories linve been hunded down by the men who fire the bottle-shaped oven which ard such a feature of the North Staffordshire landscape, Pottery has been, produced in Staffordshire for countless conturics but it was always rough, heavy ware that never improved. local workmen would have been content to produce this unattractive stuff for ever, it seemed; had not two mysterious strangers ar rived and settled down in the district towards the end of the seventeenth century. They were Dutch brothers called Elers and they spoke little English, repelled advances and made no friends. Strange lights were seen in their windows all night, and they were obviously up to something.

Mrs. R. W. asks for the following Actually, the Elers had come to the remote village to make porcelain, at that time generally believed to have the magical quality of flying asunder if anything polsonous came into contact with it. This Christian countries have glorified made it a valuable possession kings, queens and other notabilities who feared they might be poisoned by over ambitious friends. Porcelain had to be brought from China and Japan by hazardous journeys which made it almost ruinously exround balls and place on baking determined to find a secret spot in which they could manufacture it but how differently! and then sell it at high prices.

Many times Forum members are confronted with this question, by people who are not in favor of Federation of Agriculture or Farm Forums, or merely for the sake of argument. After listening to the broadcast on the subject and the reading of our Forum Guide, members were well informed and readily answered the questions.

The first question was (a) "How are the members of your group connected with the Canadian Federation of Agriculture?" All Fordims reported that they were connected through the Provincial, County and Township Federations. and also through the Milk Producers and Cream Producers and Hog Producers, as well as through the Fruit and Vegetable Growers' organizations. Then, too, township taxes help support the Federation
