SURE CURE

Strolling about New York City last Easter, I came upon a crowd staring in fascination at a taxicab in its doorway the fattest woman I ever saw was stuck fast. The driver was pulling and pushing, while she struggled to pry herself loose, cursing herself for trying to enter frontwise instead of sideways.

A small boy spoke up: "I'll get her out for you, mister," he said confidently and, walking to the other side of the cab, he threw something on the floor.

With a scream that should have waked the dead, the woman popped from the cab like a cork from a bottle.

On the floor of the cab was a small, grey-furred mechanical mouse—"Life's Like That" in the Reader's Digest.

Chronicles of Ginger Farm

Written Specially for the Acton Free Press by Gwendoline F. Clarke

Well, I came down to earth with a vengeance last week—raining, washing, knitting and housecleaning—and more of the same coming up. Guess I must have been doing too much gadding and get behind with my work. Two days away from home and I'm like a cat running after its tail. Especially when along comes an editorial letter reminding me that a promised article for the October issue of a certain magazine has not yet reached the office. Not surprising since at that time it wasn't even typed!

But the fall days are with us now and cooler weather makes work that much easier. And Partner isn't putting in any wheat so we don't have that to worry about. On a one-man farm there are enough odd jobs to keep a not-so-young farmer busy without cropping—the sort of jobs that don't show, as it were.

For instance, Partner wanted to turn the cows into another field to pasture. Before he could do that there were literally bushels of wild apples that had to be picked and taken away. Cows love to eat apples and more than one good cow has died as a result. Not here, thank goodness, although we have had to call in the vet on more than one occasion. An apple a day never yet kept the vet away.

Ever tried picking up windfalls out of long grass? It is quite a job. Partner is threatening to cut down the trees as the quickest and surest way of dealing with the problem—which I think is an excellent idea.

Strange how quickly birds sense the changing seasons. It is two weeks now since the barn swallows left. One day they were here—the next day they were gone. And we put them—darting in and out of the barn or sitting in a row along the hydro wires or the clothesline, their satiny plumage gleaming in the sun. The last two days there has been one lonely little tree swallow sitting around on the clothesline prop. I wonder what happens when a little bird gets lost.

In place of the happy little barn swallows we have the noisy blue jays. Handsome birds, no doubt, but certainly disturbers of the peace. At this minute there is a blue jay screeching from the top of an oak tree near the house—more than likely he is scolding a squirrel—of which there are plenty. Black squirrels, grey squirrels, brown squirrels—and Tippy barks at them all.

But not Honey—she isn't interested in squirrels—her hunting field is the pasture where she will flush any unsuspecting bird within range. Honey is a funny little dog—she loves people but actively dislikes all other dogs. One day Partner went down for the mail and met our neighbour from across the road with his two big dogs and four half-grown pups.

Directly she saw them Honey's fur bristled, and then, barking furiously, she took after the pups. Any one of them could have rolled Honey in the dust with one paw, instead of which they all ran yelping back to the house. Having put the pups to rout Honey came back and went after the two big dogs. They, too, turned tail and fled. Tippy sat by the side of the road completely bewildered by the antics of the other dogs.

Another time a neighbour came to call—a dog-lover, if ever there was one—with plenty of her own. After she had left for home, walking across the fields, I went up to the hen-pen. When I came out there was no sign of our two dogs—until I looked across the front field and there was our neighbour bringing the dogs back home because they wouldn't leave her. Two dogs that had never followed anyone before—that is, outside of our own family, or someone staying in the house. I suppose we have got enough domestic animals

SURE-FIRE SIGNAL

A business friend with a sure-fire signal for overwork is described in The Financial Post by Napier Moore. Every once in a while the friend drops into a shooting gallery. Picking up a gun and a clip of cartridges, he first fires at some simple, well-defined target such as a bull's-eye to test the idiosyncrasies of the gun and its sights. Then he takes on more difficult targets, such as distinguishing lighted candles.

If his hand is steady and his aim true, he knows he is in good physical shape. If he scores more misses than direct hits he knows that he has been working too hard, slows down and gets more rest.

Courteously Yours...

We think you like telephone people to be friendly, pleasant and easy to get along with. You want to deal with someone who takes a real interest in your problems and who is willing to give you a little extra attention.

That's the kind of service we want you to have. It makes your telephone mean more to you, makes our job mean more to us.
