The really young gals have been somewhat neglected as far as fashion hints go. Still not as neglected as the men are, though...

HOUSE BUILDING

House building appears to be easing off slightly, according to The Financial Post, but it's still strong. New dwelling units started from beginning of year to June 1 total 28,751, completed, 32,065.

Quebec has one of the largest and most accessible deposits of the metal titanium, as strong as steel, but much lighter.

Chronicles

Written Specially for the Acton Free Press by Gwendolyn F. Clarke

Much to our regret we did not see Princess Elizabeth and the Duke of Edinburgh. But we followed them by radio—until we got too annoyed to listen. Not with the Royal visitors, bless their tired, patient and forgiving hearts—but with officialdom for its flagrant disregard of the expressed wishes of the young couple for a visit "with as little formality as possible". Think for a minute. Here is a young girl who, twice during the last few years, has become a mother. Add to that the strain of the King's illness — and probably the unspoken fear that all too soon she might be called upon to take over the responsibilities of a sovereign state. Then comes this tour of the Dominion — incongruously described as "a holiday in Canada".

Our daughter said Elizabeth looked very tired on Saturday. But I venture to say it would not be the thousands of cheering children who tired her, nor meeting the patients at Sunnybrook Hospital, but rather the State functions with their numerous guests and the constant barrage of photographer's bulbs. Even on Sunday there was no let-up—no privacy, even at church. I don't think any of us are so curious that we need time so many intimate details.

Prince Philip has certainly won great popularity for himself. We were glad to hear his splendid address to the Board of Trade and to know the care he is taking of his princess wife.

And now to change the subject. I have always wanted to go to the International Plowing Match — and last Friday I did just that. I enjoyed the atmosphere of the event. Everyone was friendly, there was not too much noise, no midway, no clutter, and you didn't feel pushed around. There was plenty of commercial advertising, but it was the real thing—not just something to catch the eye.

Exhibits were constructive attempts to keep farmers up-to-date with modern machinery. As a contrast there was an old threshing machine driven by a steam engine — and both were doing a good job. As the sheaves were fed into the machine it was one man's job to cut the bands. For regular field threshing it would take sixteen men to keep the machine going. I was wishing Partner had been there to see it but he has been to the ploughing match other years and it makes less rush if one of us stays at home.

A number of trucks and tractor-trailers were taking people on a tour of inspection of the entire grounds. I got aboard one of them and had my rough ride along with the rest. All the ploughing looked so nice I was glad I didn't have to decide which was the best. The farm pond was interesting. It's 7 1/2 feet deep and, by means of a force pump, was the main supply for an extensive irrigation system.

The fire-fighting demonstration was splendid. Firemen poured kerosene on to a shallow pond and then set fire to it. Immediately there was a huge volume of smoke with angry flames licking their way skyward. Two firemen stood by, hose in hand. Just as you began to feel scared in case the fire might really get away the men went to work with their hose. In a little while the fire was completely extinguished. I imagine it wasn't more than three minutes.

Of course I found the "Tented City" quite an attraction. I left my coat for the Family Herald to look after but I was disappointed none of the editors were on hand to meet the public. In the W.I. tent Mrs. Thomas Myers, Zurich, and Mrs. J. H. McCulloch, Brampton, were kept busy talking to interested visitors and serving tea. Incidentally there were several attractive test rooms serving tea free of charge.

For years I have heard of the wonderful job of catering done by two separate church organizations not very far from here. So I set out to investigate. Wonderful is an understatement—I would call it a stupendous undertaking. In one tent I knew quite a few of the men and women in charge—and more of them knew me through this column. Many of them looked tired—

Poet's Corner

TO OUR ROYAL VISITORS PRINCESS ELIZABETH AND PRINCE PHILIP

Oh, vision of loveliness and charm. In dignity you come before us now. Gracious and eager, willing to serve us well. Heirless to a mighty throne, noble and true, Parents of a future king, we honor you. Allegiance to our sovereignty, we vow anew. And all thy virtues tell. A daughter of high estate we see. Yet trained in all simplicity. That you might know the common thing of man—the humble heart. The human touch which wealth holds not a part. May God protect and guard thy way. And keep our Empire strong, we pray. And may we strive to be each any More valiant and pure. That in thy time thy reign might be Of freedom and fraternity. A people united, loyal and free. Our peace secure.

Laura B. Dixon, Milton R. R.—2

quite a few were far from being young—but they were all in good spirits. Imagine taking truck loads of necessary equipment over 80 miles — tables, stoves, benches, cots and bedding—to say nothing of the food and baking necessary to feed a constant stream of hungry diners. Imagine the work at home preparing for this event. And then leaving home: being on your feet for four days; working without accustomed conveniences; sleeping away from your own bed and taking a chance on the weather. But the women. The men were helping too—in fact one man — a six footer—looked really cute, waiting on the tables with a pretty little red and white apron tied around his waist!
