meter had been sent to the manu-Joseph Graham, son of piofacturer for repairs so that it could neers, died on March 4th at the be put back into operation when home of his brother, George, R. R. No. 1, Acton. Superintendent Lambert reported

He was born on the old Graham homestead, lot 2, concession 7, Eramosa, in November, 1881, and had lived his full 70 years within sound of Acton whistles. His forefathers were English and Scottish borderers. Violet Murdoch, his mother, came from Scotland in 1848, and James' Graham, his grandfather, came from Cumberland in 1842.

Like his father and grandfather, Joseph Graham was an expert feeder of horses and cattle; he was the sewage pumping station had never seen on the road with a shabby tam. He liked nothing better for recreation than to wander over the ancestral acres with his .32 rifle, earning the reputation Superintendent Lambert reported of being a crack shot.

Following in the footstens of his trols the chlorinator at the spring parents. Joe was always loyal in had burnt out. Another one is to church affairs. After being a member of Rockwood Presbyterian Church since boyhood, he withdrew his membership when that congregation entered the United Church. He remained with the Presbyterian Information is to be secured from the architects at the school to find school. If necessary, a larger Joe continued his interest in a well kept garden. Almost every, farm around his boyhood home was represented at the funeral conducted by his paster, Rev. R. H. Armstrong. at the Victor B. Rumley Funeral Home on March 7th. Joseph Graham was never married. Mourning his passing are his elder brother. George: his younger brother, Rev. Wm. Graham, United Church minister at Powell River, B.C. and his sister Agnes (Mrs.

Charles Taylor) in Alberta. Pallbearers were nephews George McBain, Wm. McBain, Chester Mc-Bain, Murray McBain, Gordon Currie, and Campbell Currie, Numerous floral tributes bore testimony of the esteem in which the deceased was held. 34 00
