CANADIAN EDITOR REPORTS ON QUEEN'S INSPECTION OF NAVY

Portsmouth, June 15 — Although I arrived here late as I had to count down from Central England where I had been looking over rural England in having time and attending some farm shows I got a better look at the array of battleships here than many of the London or other Canadian news men.

When I got to HMS Verne which is the name of the land post where Naval Headquarters are at Portsmouth I had to battle my way for hours through traffic all going to get to the same place — the Naval Show. The Queen was to inspect her Navy.

I happened into the press room just as a London reporter had telephoned to a telephone and stood by while this chap gave him a typical English interview. He asked every question you could imagine but the one I wanted an answer to — Where could we go to see the show?

However, just as we were about to leave he asked me to wait for a moment. He said he had to get through one of the officers on the phone. He said he would get through the lines now as the Queen had commenced her inspection. However, from a high tower in the yards one could climb up steps and watch her yacht as it made its way around the lines.

As an afterthought he told me a mail boat was going up among the fleet after the inspection and a credited press representative would be allowed a pass.

Leaving no time in securing this we made for the lower shore, carefully reaching the top in time to see the trip white yacht making a turn to come back inside the lines.

Warned to be on time as the mail tenders were known to leave early I was on board before the mail ship when I saw bags labelled H.M.C. Magnificent I knew I had chosen the right mail boat as there were five of them leaving the harbor.

Once out into the harbor we met a headwind and our little craft which was originally a mine sweeper, took into the waves instead of over them. I was loaned an oil slicker by one of the crew. So we were to our first ship in the line, this one we came alongside and passed the mail bags up and received the outgoing mail in return. Even the Registers were signed off.

However, this was the last craft to which we could haul mail, the others were too large or had lights strung around them which prevented our boat from coming alongside. The navy craft sent us motor-driven boats manned by four men, to take off the mail.

At the illustration we put off with their mail that of the Canadian ships. The small boat which came out rolled and tossed on the waves and when it got to the mother ship it was necessary to climb a long set of stairs hung on the side with ropes which rather discouraged our endeavoring to make the trip. I know from later reports I really missed a very sociable evening but those on board there also missed seeing many of the craft among which our little mail boat made its call.

We passed close by the Quebec, also the Ontario, both of which made a Canadian proud of his part in the show, especially when the sailors of the little mine sweeper mail boat went out of their way to compliment these ships. They were outlined in electric lights which were lighted simultaneously with all the others on a green signal at 10.30 p.m.

Italian Sailing Ship
One sight which is almost a thing of the past was the Italian sailing craft Amerigo Vesputcci, a completely rigged sailing craft. Just as we circled just by the sun, which had been obscured, he came through and sat her out in a star light, dark and tan. In front of us was something most of us have never seen only in pictures. When the Queen passed her the sailors were in the rigging and on the yard arms to take their duty salute. The show was worth braving the weather to see.

Russian Cruiser Sverdlov
We passed just under the bow of the Russian cruiser. This was one of the most businesslike types of vessels of her class among the whole show.

Built somewhat after the style of a tram racing or pleasure craft, it was long and heavy enough to be a formidable fighting vessel. She had the appearance that if speed was needed to make time she had it and if guns were the answer there were plenty visible.

The crew were doing some kind of a folk dance when we were passing.

Later, at 9 p.m. when colors were taken down we heard with excitement a French cruiser, the first play their National Anthem, then God Save the Queen, when the whole ship companies, including our little crew, stood to attention.

Between the masts of Russian cruiser was hung a large star made up of lights as well as lights to outline the whole hull. As we passed that we might see this lighted star close range, as though we were

Tips on Touring
By Carol Lane
Women's Travel Authority

Almost every stage some unique event that is an exciting vacation goal in itself.

The "local" flavor of some of these events is what gives them their charm. Like the Cherry Blossom Festival, chosen by judging of local pies and pulchritude. Others are spectacles as thrilling as they are varied. For instance, in July the Calgary Exhibition and Stampede which attracts cowboys from all over the country, is an important annual event.

For theatre lovers, there's the magnificent Shakespearean Festival in Stratford, Ontario or the charming Highland Games in Antigonish, Nova Scotia. The Laurentians offer a gay Summer Program and Shediac, New Brunswick, offers quaint historical traditions in its Lobster Festival. Throughout the summer Indians display their exotic rituals and dances on certain dates.

The Canadian Government Travel Bureau is glad to send lists of these special events, so are the Chambers of Commerce, Touring Societies or various Automobile Clubs.

I hope you will plan to include at least one of these enjoyable events in your vacation schedule.

Women's Institute members here were given a most interesting meeting at the home of Mrs. J. Storey. The meeting was presided over by the Mary Stewart. The roll call was answered by some helpful serving hints.

Some dollars were sent to the Department of Agriculture field day. The Institute picnic to be held in July was planned by Mrs. A. Latham and Mrs. J. Phillips. Mrs. Phillips, who is in charge of the program. Reports were read from the annual and Guelph conference. A motto "Homemaking is not just the attitude we take" was given by Mrs. F. Brown.

Refreshments were served and a special time enjoyed.

NEIGHBORS AT DUBLIN HONOR YOUNG COUPLE

Friday, June 18, Dublin neighbors gathered in the school to honor Miss Louise Mullin and Charles King. The occasion was their approaching marriage ceremony consisting of vocal solo by Marilyn Rosenwaldson, piano by Wilmer Fryer, dance by Jackie and Billy Dawe and a reception by Allan and Annette.

The young couple were then called to the front and Miss Edith Fryer gave the bride away. After Miss Mullin and Mr. King had opened their eyes, they were presented with beautiful gifts they were most grateful to the group.
