Nitrogen Seen Key To Food Supplies

The discovery of a new way to produce nitrogen gas may be the key to solving the world's food supply problem. The new method, developed by a team of scientists at the University of California, promises to make it possible to produce large amounts of nitrogen gas at a much lower cost than ever before.

The new method involves the use of a special type of bacteria that can convert atmospheric nitrogen into a form that can be used by plants. This process is called "fixation" and it has been known for many years.

The new method, however, makes it possible to produce large amounts of nitrogen gas at a much lower cost than ever before. This is because the new method does not require the use of expensive equipment or materials.

The new method is expected to be available within the next few years. It is hoped that it will help to solve the world's food supply problem.
