As the years have passed, the interest has grown until there are now 114 countries sharing in the World Day of Prayer In Canada, the movement has grown steadily through the years until in 1953, the service was held in nearly 3 000 communities. Many who share in the services are finding a new meaning in Christian friendship and fellowship and are reaching new levels of prayer. This year's service was written by Dr Sarah Chakko, an out standing Indian Christian. Chakko was principal of a wo only woman vice-president of the World Council of Churches. The service she prepared is enriched both by her national culture and Syrian Orthodox church. When, on March 5, the Christian women of the world share in this not be thinking of it as "a message from one country to another, but nor will they be thinking of Sarah study book. Chakko as an Indian woman, but as a "symbol of the unity of all Christians."
