

In The Window

On display in the Free Press window this week are some of the Jamboree souvenirs. These included issues of the newspaper, badges, a special Jamboree neckerchief, first day cover envelopes with the special stamp and pictures.

First Day Covers To Stamp Collectors

Several Actonians asked for first day covers from the World Jamboree, and these were mailed on the first Saturday of camp. To commemorate the holding of the Jamboree in Canada, the Post Office department made available the new stamps on August 20, the official opening day of the Jamboree.

The green and gold stamp was issued in the five-cent denomination only. It was designed by Ottawa artist Laurence Hyde and was issued as a tribute to the International Boy Scout movement which is making a special contribution to world understanding.

Mr. Jackson Dodds, the Jamboree Camp Chief, bought the first stamp, Dave Dills, on hand to get a picture, bought the second.

They were mailed in specially printed first day cover envelopes, and will be a valuable item in local collections.

Boost Business

The names of two Acton businesses may well be known around the world! Beardmore's gave a box of leather articles to be given away at the Jamboree and R. F. Bean gave dozens of pencils with his name on them. These items were handed out to scouts from all corners of the globe.

Long Hours, Amusing Experiences For Staff of "Jamboree Journal"

Special feature of this week's Free Press are articles written by the two Acton Scouts who attended the eighth World Boy Scout Jamboree, and several pictures of the event. This is the first time the Jamboree was held on the North American continent, and, as Lady Baden-Powell pointed out, it will not likely be here again in any of our lifetimes.

Dave Dills' account follows.

For me, the eighth world Jamboree at Niagara-on-the-Lake turned into a real busman's holiday. After volunteering to assist at the Jamboree some months ago, I received a letter informing me I had been appointed to the Jamboree Journal staff. The Journal was the official daily newspaper of the Jamboree and in its pages each day were mirrored the happenings of this great "gathering of the clans" in both words and pictures.

Under the editorship of Bert Mortlock of Ottawa, the Canadian Executive Commissioner for Publications, who led the Canadian contingent to the Coronation two years ago, the Journal was a small 16-page size paper.

Each day 10,000 copies were printed in Brampton, 80 miles from the camp site. Of this number, approximately 4,000 were sold each day and the remainder were to be bound into souvenir editions.

The editor and one of the 14-man staff left the Jamboree site at 4:30 each afternoon, taking with them the stories and pictures which were assembled into newspaper by about 2 a.m. After catching 40 winks and arising bright and early, they drove back to the Jamboree, arriving about 10 a.m.

Added Feature

The newspaper was published in the two official languages of all Jamborees, French and English. There were four interpreters on the staff. Our French staff consisted of Father Raymond Lavoie, a radio commentator Robert Hamel — and an added feature, two French secretaries!

While gathering the news and taking pictures, I had some interesting and amusing experiences.

The first story I did was on the guard of honor which was inspected by the Right Honorable Vincent Massey, Governor-General and Chief Scout, on the official opening day. The guard was made up of Scouts representing each of the countries at the Jamboree.

This was one of the really hot days. The Armenian scouts were suffering from the extremities of the weather. They could scarcely stand the heat, yet that morning the cooler temperatures had kept them shivering in their sleeping bags until 10!

Had Lunch, Anyway
One afternoon I was assigned to report a press conference at the French headquarters. I was cordially received, and the contingent leader, M. Rigal, spoke to us at considerable length. Then we were served ginger ale, crackers and French cheese, and all left. With apologies to Mrs. Hinton who taught me French, there was no story. M. Rigal's remarks, to the distress of several of the reporters, were all in French with absolutely no interpretation!

Another afternoon I attended a reception by the Greek contingent at their campsite. One of the scouts in his frilly white national garb presented each of the visitors with a bag of raisins.

French Cuisine
Food was always a topic of conversation. Stories about Headquarters staff meals included the one about the man who broke his head boiled egg to find the chicken had already arrived. It was always a pleasure to be invited out to the sub-camps for a meal. These were favorite assignments.

One of the enjoyable ones was a brunch we had with a French troop. They weren't interested in breakfast and saved their rations to splurge on noon dinner, served in best French style. One patrol served the remaining three, prefaced by the reading aloud of the menu by a young maitre d'hotel — in French, of course.

Quite a few Acton visitors attended the Canadian pageant depicting Canadian history last Thursday evening. Little did they realize that when those 1500 shrieking Indians attacked that cardboard fort, we photographers were almost massacred along with the settlers. We were only saved by leaping up onto the huge platform.

Since returning, we hear of visitors we did not see there, and offer apologies for not showing them around.

Prince Cheered

The Friday junket to the Exhibition was pretty exhausting because in addition we had been assigned to do the photography for the last two days of the Jamboree. One person at least was full of enthusiasm, His Serene Highness, Emmanuel, the Prince of Liechtenstein.

As the sole representative of this small principality in the parade, he was so engrossed with the applause he received from the grandstand, he overlooked giving the salute to Lord Rowellan and Camp Chief Jackson Dodds!

The informal closing ceremonies on Saturday afternoon were climaxed by the good fellowship displayed by all the scouts. All through the grounds, boys of all nationalities were walking together, their arms linked. As the flags came down for the last time, and the band burst into Auld Lang Syne, everyone felt a new spirit of comradeship and dedication—particularly two South American scouts beside me who, thinking it was the national anthem, snapped to attention and saluted.
