> You can imagine her answer. Well, we thought we had heard almost everything in the way of advice to farmers, but last week Professor D. R. Campbell, head of the O.A.C. came out with something quite new. In brief he said there were too many farmers and those in low income groups should move to jobs in industry. As if young farmers need encouragement in that direction! Promising young fellows. ing modern and progressive farmers, have already been lured away by industry's shorter hours and higher wages.

As for hired help, a good man is Ada Currie and Mr. Erett Currie, hard to get. In fact this problem alone deters many farmers from operating their farms to capacityand in that way they help increase the number of low-income farmers.
