Do You Know Acton

During the past few weeks we have been mpiling data about Acton and district for inclusion in a booklet to be published giving similar information about other towns in Canada. It's facts that are considered essential to give a picture of the market of this area.

necessary to accumulate these facts and enlightening to know that in spite of all the statistics published, there are many of the questions that cannot be accurately answered. When we encountered so much work we wondered how much the average citizen or business man knows about his town and trading area. It's interesting to know too that so many other people are interested in these facts about the various towns in Canada.

Last week there were recording devices here and there on the highways about town recording the amount of traffic. One never knows what group or department it is that seeks the information gathered. One can never be sure for what purpose the data will be used.

There is, however, one thing certain. Every businessman and every citizen can be a good ambassador for Acton with very little effort. When a stranger makes inquiry about our town, be a booster. You never know what sort of a survey is being made: If you cannot answer his queries intelligently be courteous enough to endeavor to direct him to where he or she can get the answers.

If you cannot speak good of the town or district, don't knock the town or your fellow citizens. The stranger may be making a survey for a new industry and nobody wants to settle among a bunch of knockers or pessimists. If you want the town to grow and progress be progressive yourself. It's surprising what the booster can do and what a rotten impression the knocker can leave with a stranger. Learn all the good about your town and be ready to pass it on. There's always a few who can be depended upon to give the bad impression without even being asked.

Those Decisions

Recently we attended a meeting in which a had spring and summer. certain part of the budget presented by Hon. Walter Harris was under discussion. It is one of those controversial points in which newspaper editors have a vital interest. The pros and cons were carefully considered and the discussion ended in a no-decision bout. The issue was neither condemned or commended. Finance ministers must have many a headache making decisions.

The following week we read and appreciated Bruce Hutchinson's column in the Financial Post i clock ahead an hour on Sunday morning. in which he said he had yet to hear of a finance minister rise in parliament and remark by way of introduction. "I am of opinion, Mr. Speaker, that my, budget is lop-sided, cockeyed and dangerous, but what can I do against a cabinet ravenous for money, a House of Commons that demands the impossible miracle of more spending and lower taxes, a tax-paying public that already works two days a week for the state without knowing it and seems determined by its demands on Government to work still more?

"And to tell the truth," this paragon of treasurers might add, "I don't really like the looks of things at all when we're largely financing the boom on the sale of our assets to the Americans and, in fact, living beyond our means."

That is not the customary language of Hansard. Yet under present conditions it could be the kind of advice we need, if not the kind usually demanded in the newspapers:

Just Looking Back

Recently when we installed in our offices, two telephone lines to central we were reminded ofour boyhood days when one of our first jobs was to work on odd days at A. T. Brown's drug store to take out messages for long distance calls to parties who were called in town. There weren't many in those days when Acton had about 20 telephones in the whole town. The Free Press phone was a party line when we started the printing. There was a telephone at the office and another at the editor's home. They seldom rang. We recall when first approached to put a telephone in our home we refused to make the expenditure on the ground that there were so few who could be called that it would be useless. Now we have two sets at home and three sets for various parts of the office and most everyone has a telephone in the home and considers it a neces-

Acton's streets in those days were cluttered with wires. On Mill Street the north side? had hundreds of single telephone wires and separate electric light poles. The south side had telegraph wires to the station from the post office. Now nearly all the wires are underground, along the backs of property lines or carried in big cables.

It took us a week to get used to having two lines ringing in from central, but it took us a month to get used to and hear properly over that early line and for long-distance all presses had to be stopped and complete silence assured in the office to carry on a conventation. Suppose though there's nothing unusual in this doubling up since the Free Press in those days had only four employees where today there are sixteen, the space occupied is more than double and the equipment more than doubled. In these days it seems double or nothing is the rule.

Forgot to mention the Free Press number in those early days was 11A and today it's 600 and

A Foundation for Life

When school boards and teachers appear to tr's surprising how much research has been | be preoccupied with buildings and pedagogical techniques, says the Toronto Telegram, it is well to have an educationist such as Sir Richard Livingstone, former vice-chancellor of Oxford University, point out that of even greater importance in the education of youth is the inculcation of high moral standards.

In a thought-provoking address to the Ontario Educational Association, Sir Richard stated that the greatest need in education today is to teach the knowledge of good and evil, for without this the Bible could not put into words knowledge the use of all other skills is sterile. Youth must be taught to strive for excellence, but lieves the Bible as follows: the labor is without direction and without foundation if it is not based on a knowledge of good and evil. Only by that knowledge is it possible ice and mercy. to distinguish between excellence and cheapness, between virtue and vice.

These abstractions have their reflection in man Person - Christ. everyday life. People are honorable, decent, religitrom sin to salvation. ious. The opposite are also evident and Sir Richard suggests that a decline in values and standards accounts for them. Success today is an end in itself. How it is achieved is of small significance, perennial, universal charm. and if the method is shabby and underhand it does not matter so long as one is not found out.

"Success" itself has as many meanings as there are people who seek it, and the meaning an in- lication, it is still the best seller. dividual gives it depends on that person's stand aids and sense of values. For this reason, Sir Richard emphasizes, nothing is of greater import ance in the education of children than to give consolation for men dying in war. them a moral foundation upon which they may knowing good from evil, build their lives.

Good Old Days.

The Terrible earthquake and conflagration in San Fransisco, Cal. has caused earnest solicitation on all sides for the safety of friends in that unfortunate city. Mr. A. A. Secord received the following message on Tuesday from his nephew, A. A. Marlatt, who is employed on the Daily' Chonricle: "Self and wife safe but lost everything." Municipal officer Price has a beother who has a wife and five children in the city and he has had no message from them.
