Visions Spread In Use of Gas

Natural gas aims at providing the home with air conditioning as well as fuel for heat and cooking. Dean H. Mitchell of New York, president of the American Gas Association, said recently in an address to the Canadian Gas Association.

"The United States market is crying for a complete home air-conditioning unit, and it seems likely that the fuel that captures air conditioning will also capture the heating load," he said.

Natural gas, Mr. Mitchell predicted, would mark the beginning of a new era for Canada. In the United States the gas industry, as the result of natural gas, was perhaps the only large basic industry that had quadrupled in less than two decades.

The United States had encountered problems between producers, pipeline and distributors, which he hoped Canada might escape. Producers often tended to go their way; pipeline sometimes attempted to raid distribution companies by direct sales to companies; distributors sometimes lacked understanding of the problems of both pipeline and producer.

The address of Percy W. Gellard of Toronto, president of the Canadian Association, read by E. R. Palin of Chatham, Ont., first vice-president—said recent developments give some measure of hope that with the construction of what is planned as the longest gas pipe line in the world, Western Canadian natural gas will be available in all provinces from Alberta to Quebec in the not-too-distant future.

Accordingly, the potential near-term growth of the Canadian gas industry was enormous.
